DISCOVERING POLAND

Perched between East and West, Poland has had a varied history which has shaped it into the beguiling, delightful and refreshingly different mix of old and new that we see today. The chapters of this book have been divided into nine colour-coded regions to reflect the diversity of Poland. Each region has its own special flavour: its own architecture, cuisine, customs and sights. The following pages aim to give a taste of these regions and show you what there is to see and do.

The picturesque square at the heart of Warsaw's Old Town

WARSAW

- Postcard-pretty Old Town
- A Socialist Realist city
- Exciting nightlife

Rebuilt to its original 13th-century design after being destroyed in World War II, Warsaw's Old Town (see pp62–7) is truly delightful. The city's controversial post-war Socialist Realist architecture, embodied by the Palace of Culture and Science (see p89), reflects the capital's more recent history. Be sure to visit a few of the city's vibrant bars and clubs for a taste of Warsaw's nightlife.

MAZOVIA AND THE LUBLIN REGION

- Renaissance Zamość
- Chopin and Żelazowa Wola
- Picturesque Vistula Valley

The finely preserved town of Zamość (see pp124–5) was built in the 16th century according to the Renaissance concept of the ideal city.

The birthplace of Chopin, Żelazowa Wola (see p114) houses a fascinating museum dedicated to the great Polish composer. In the idyllic Vistula Valley, affluent Kazimierz Dolny (see pp118–19) is the unofficial capital of the area popular with Poland's New Rich.

CRACOW

- Wonderful Old Town
- Historic Wawel Hill
- Cracow Jewish Festival

Cracow's Old Town centres around the beautiful 13th-century market square (see p130), which features many fine examples of Gothic and Renaissance architecture. The Old Town is overlooked by the glorious buildings on Wawel Hill (see pp138–43), a symbol of national strength and patriotism. At the annual Festival of Jewish Culture (see p33), you can enjoy music, art, theatre performances and much more.

MAŁOPOLSKA

- Poland's painful past
- Wieliczka's salt mine
- Winter sports at Zakopane

The tragedy of the Polish Jews can be witnessed at Oświęcim (Auschwitz) (see p160) where an estimated 1.1 million people died at the hands of the Nazis. This is now a UNESCO World Heritage Site. The old underground salt mine at Wieliczka (see p162) features a chapel, museum and a restaurant. A favourite retreat for many artists and intellectuals at the turn of the 20th century, Poland's winter capital Zakopane (see p164) attracts thousands of skiers every winter.

The ski resort at Zakopane, upgraded for the 2006 Olympics

SILESIA

- Historic Wrocław
- Gold-digging in Złotoryja
- Getting away from it all in the Kłodzko Valley

As well as a bustling Old Town, Wrocław (see pp188–97) is home to many of the country's more eclectic contemporary artists. Złotoryja (see p180) sits on the banks of the gold-rich Kaczawa River. Try your luck, then visit the Gold Museum or watch the experts at the International Gold Panning Championships. The majestic Kłodzko Valley (see pp200–1) is criss-crossed with hiking trails full of ancient churches and castles, and is famed for its mineral springs.

The Kłodzko Valley, a natural paradise for hikers

WIELKOPOLSKA

- Industrial Łódź
- Poznań's beautiful churches
- Kórnik's castle island

Built in the 1800s by a trio of mill owners, the industrial city of Łódź (see pp228–9) has many fascinating museums and a welcoming atmosphere, yet it remains almost untouched by tourism. The churches in Poznań (see pp214–19) are among the most delightful in Poland. The Gothic cathedral is the country's oldest, and the place where, allegedly, Poland's first king was christened. A visit to the island castle at Kórnik (see p211), inspired by Neo-Gothic English architecture and the Orient, is a splendid day out.

The tranquil landscape of Pomerania's Kashubia region

GDAŃSK

- The cradle of Solidarity
- Westerplatte's WWII legacy

In 1980 unemployed worker Lech Wałęsa climbed over a fence at a shipyard in Gdańsk (see pp232–49) and gave a speech that arguably led to the end of Communism. The story of Wałęsa and the Solidarity movement can be seen in Gdańsk's "Roads to Freedom" exhibition. On 1 September 1939, the opening shots of World War II were fired on the tiny Westerplatte peninsula (see p249), which is now a pilgrimage site with burned-out bunkers, a memorial and a museum.

POMERANIA

- Gothic Toruń
- Summer fun in Sopot
- Ethnic enclave in Kashubia

Founded by the Teutonic Knights, Toruń (see pp270–3) features the second-largest ensemble of Gothic architecture in Poland. The birthplace of Nicolaus Copernicus, Toruń is also known as the traditional home of gingerbread. The seaside town of Sopot (see p263) is the country's unofficial summer capital and a non-stop party venue for the three hottest months of the year.

Kashubia (see p262), known as the Polish Switzerland, is a gloriously peaceful area of lakes and rolling hills. The Kashubians are a distinctive ethnic group with their own language and culture.

WARMIS, MAZURIA AND THE BIAŁYSTOK REGION

- Fun on the Mazurian Lakes
- Copernicus's Frombork
- The bison of Białowieża

Sail or canoe on Lake Sniardwy (see pp284–5) and explore the beautiful scenery of eastern Poland, full of peaceful harbours and tiny villages. On the Baltic coast is sleepy Frombork (see p278), where the astronomer Nicolaus Copernicus spent most of his life in the town's beautifully preserved 14th-century Gothic cathedral. For a spectacular nature holiday, head to Białowieża National Park (see p291). A landscape of rivers and canals, where the last bison in Europe live, it is also a bird-watching paradise.

Putting Poland on the Map

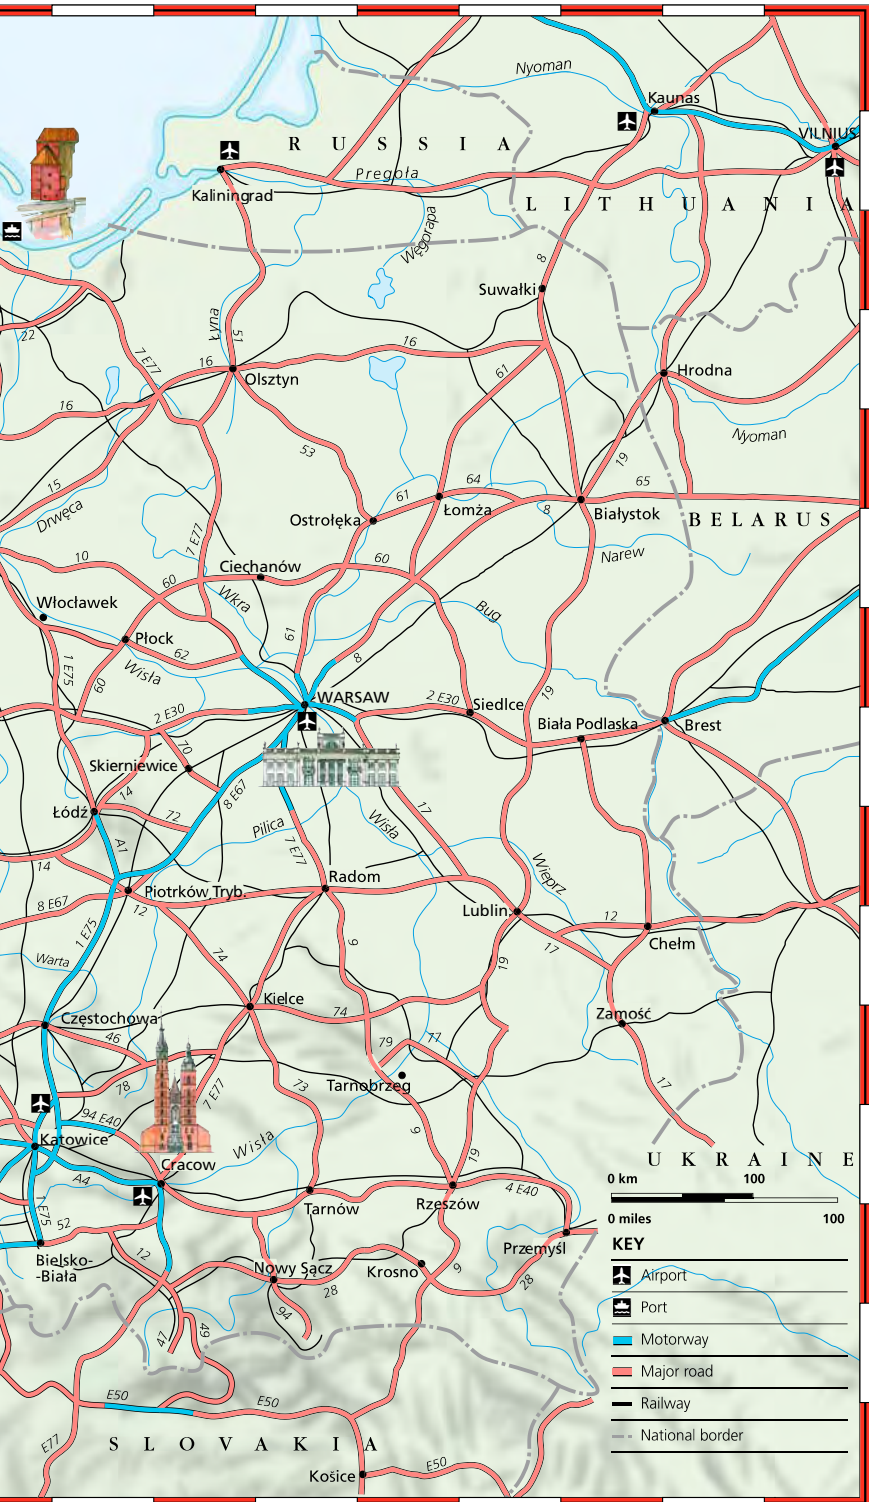

Poland covers an area of 312,685 sq km (120,696 sq miles) and is located in the centre of Europe. It borders Lithuania, Belarus and the Ukraine to the east, Slovakia and the Czech Republic to the south, and Germany to the west. In the north, Poland's coastline stretches for 528 km (330 miles) on the Baltic Sea and borders Kaliningrad, an enclave of Russia. Poland has a population of 38.6 million, making it the eighth most highly populated country in Europe. The capital, Warsaw, has over 1.6 million inhabitants.

Poland in Europe

Poland is traversed by road and rail routes linking Western and Eastern Europe. The country's largest international airport is in Warsaw; other cities also have direct air links to European cities. There are ferry links to Gdynia, Gdańsk and Swinoujście.

A PORTRAIT OF POLAND

Growing numbers of tourists visit Poland every year. Even so, it is still a relatively unknown country. To travellers crossing the lowlands from Eastern to Western Europe, there may not appear to be the diversity in landscape and buildings seen in other European countries. The pages that follow show the visitor the variety that Poland has to offer, in terms of its culture, history and landscape.

Although it is situated in the plains of central Europe, Poland has a varied landscape. Alpine scenery predominates in the Tatra Mountains along the country's southern border, while the north is dominated by lakelands, which contrast with the landscape of the Baltic coast. For those who like unspoiled natural scenery, there are areas of primeval forests in Białowieża and extensive marshlands along the banks of the River Biebrza which are a haven for many rare bird and plant species. About 30 per cent of the area of Poland is woodland, including a number of vast forests covering more than 1,000 sq km (390 sq miles). Most of these consist of coniferous trees and mixed woodland, but there are also many forests of deciduous trees, mainly oak and hornbeam, or beech.

Many areas of great natural beauty are protected as national parks or reserves.

Mountain lovers can make use of the well-developed infrastructure of hostels and other shelters, such as those found in the Beskid Sądecki or the Tatra Mountains; the more adventurous can explore the unfrequented and almost inaccessible Beskid Niski or Bieszczady. All areas have clearly marked hiking trails and well-equipped shelters (schroniska). The countless lakes of Warmia and Mazuria, areas known as the Land of a Thousand Lakes (Kraina Tysiąca Jezior) are a haven for watersports enthusiasts, as are the waters of Pomerania and Wielkopolska. The lakes are popular with canoeists and in summer are dotted with rowing and sailing boats.

POPULATION AND RELIGION

Poland's inhabitants, who number almost 39 million, all but constitute a single ethnic group, with minorities accounting for less than 4 per cent of the population. The largest minorities are Belarussians and Ukrainians, who inhabit the east of the country, and Germans, who are concentrated mainly around the city of Opole in Silesia.

The vast majority of Poles are Catholic, but large regions of the country, such as Cieszyn Silesia, have a substantial Protestant population, and followers of other denominations are also widely dispersed. In the east of the country there are many Orthodox Christians; here, religious denomination does not necessarily coincide with ethnic identity, although Belarussians tend to be Orthodox while Ukrainians belong to the Greek Catholic (Uniate) Church. In the Białystok region there are villages where Catholics, Orthodox Christians and Muslims – the descendants of Tartar settlers – live side by side. As in Spain and Ireland, the fact that the majority of the population is Catholic continues to exert a major influence on the moral values of the country, as well as on its political life. An example of this is the many debates in the Sejm (the lower house of the Polish parliament) that have alternately limited and liberalized the right to abortion. Religion, however, is not a major factor in the way that Poles vote, as election results show. The political scene is divided between the supporters of the right and the post-communist left. Over the last ten years the Polish electorate has shown itself to be quite unstable, with each elected government standing in opposition to the previous one.

Lacemaker from Koniakowo

Religious belief is outwardly expressed by a deep reverence for religious symbols and rituals. Wayside crosses and shrines to the saints or the Virgin Mary add charm to the Polish countryside. The main religious festivals – Christmas, Easter, Corpus Christi and Assumption, as well as All Saints' Day, when almost everyone in Poland, regardless of their religious denomination, visits the graves of relatives – are solemnly observed. An unusual cult surrounds the Virgin. For centuries, believers from all over Poland and further afield have made the pilgrimage to the image of the Black Madonna in Częstochowa (see pp156–7). Indeed, throughout Poland there are shrines to the Virgin, to whom miraculous powers have been ascribed. Another famous pilgrimage is made by Orthodox Christians to the holy mountain of Grabarka (see p291). Poland is also visited by Jews from all over the world who come in remembrance of the millions who died there during the Holocaust under German occupation of the country during World War II.

CULTURAL VARIETY AND SHIFTING BORDERS

Magnificent buildings bearing witness to past splendours can be seen at almost every step. Most of these monuments are in Małopolska, Lubelszczyzna, Wielkopolska and Lower Silesia. Not all of them, however, belong to Polish culture, since the country's frontiers have changed many times over the centuries. A particularly important change came at the end of World War II, when the Allies approved a westward shift of Poland's borders. As a result, the inhabitants of the eastern areas, lost to Poland after the war, were resettled, and many were sent to the western regions, inhabited by Germans – who were in turn displaced.

A poster by Maria Pałasińska dedicated to Solidarity

The legacy of more than 100 years of partition rule is still visible in Poland's cultural landscape today. Russian, Prussian and Austrian administration left their mark not only on rural and urban architecture but also on the customs and mentality of the Polish people.

DEMOCRATIC CHANGE AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

The fall of communism in Poland came about largely thanks to the efforts of the trade union Solidarity (Solidarność), which was founded in 1980 but forced to go underground after the imposition of martial law. When the democratic opposition won the elections to the Sejm and the Senate in 1989, Poland again became a country with a parliamentary democracy and a market economy. This was important enough in itself, but it had wider implications too: by tackling its inefficient, crisis-ridden socialist economy, Poland had set the standard for economic reform in Central and Eastern Europe as a whole. Many Polish industries were privatized, and the drastic reforms that were carried through over a number of years accelerated Poland's GDP to make it the fastest-growing in Europe. By the end of the 1990s, the Polish economy had become largely resistant to crisis.

The country has a substantial foreign trade deficit, but this is balanced by the surplus produced by an unofficial cross-border trade. There are, however, negative aspects of the reforms – among them the budget deficit and unemployment. The latter continues to be high. The problem of unemployment is somewhat mitigated by the illegal employment of workers, although this is usually confined to small firms. There is an ambitious programme of privatization, but it has not yet been fully completed, and some enterprises are still state-owned.

Heavy industry tends to be outdated, unprofitable and economically inefficient. There is an ongoing systematic programme of coal-mine closure, and former mineworkers have been forced to look for work elsewhere.

The Pazim, the tallest building in Szczecin

Political and economic changes have had their impact on Poland's towns and cities. Old buildings are being renovated, attention is being paid to the environment, new shops have appeared, and large out-of-town supermarkets and modern petrol (gas) stations have sprung up. New buildings – though not always architecturally distinctive – are going up everywhere. Market squares and main streets in many Polish towns have been pedestrianized. In many of the old towns that suffered damage during World War II – including Szczecin, Kołobrzeg, Głogów and Elbląg – buildings are now being reconstructed. Smaller towns, too – swelled by sprawling apartment housing after the war – are now acquiring more traditional buildings. Nonetheless, the vast concrete housing developments typical of the communist era still dominate many Polish townscapes.

Not surprisingly, this has brought considerable social and economic problems in its wake.

The archaic farming system is another candidate for restructuring. Polish farming is still based on traditional family smallholdings consisting of no more than a few acres of land. It is seriously under-mechanized and requires a disproportionate amount of manpower.

Many new public buildings – mainly office blocks – are springing up, too. Much of the new development is centred on the capital, Warsaw, although commercial investment is now slowly beginning to filter through to other cities, among them Cracow, Katowice, the Baltic conurbation of Gdańsk, Sopot and Gdynia, and Wrocław, Poznań and Łódź as well.

A fundamental part of the reform process was Poland's drive to join Western military and economic structures. In 1999, Poland became a member of NATO, and then in 2004, it joined the European Union. This required harmonization of the Polish legal and economic systems with those of the EU countries, providing a further powerful incentive to change.

The Landscape of Poland

A cabbage white on a meadow flower

Poland's landscape is very varied. The south of the country is bounded by mountain ranges which, the further north you travel, gradually turn into areas punctuated by hills and low-lying ancient forests. Northern Poland, an area of great natural beauty, has been shaped by a succession of glaciers that moved southwards from Scandinavia.

National parks and reserves have been established in many areas. The central regions of the country, consisting of lowlands, merge into picturesque lakelands and coastal plains.

FAUNA OF POLAND

Roman snail

The most typical Polish wildlife – including wild boar, deer and hare – is to be found in mixed and deciduous forests. Some species, such as bison and capercaillie, are found almost nowhere else in Europe. In the Carpathian and Sudety mountains, bears and lynxes may be seen.

MOUNTAINS

The Tatra Mountains (see pp164–5) are the highest in Central Europe. Though covering a small area, they provide breathtaking alpine scenery. The High Tatras (Tatry Wysokie) are mainly granite, with jagged, rocky peaks. At 2,499 m (8,200 ft) above sea level, Rysy is the highest peak in Poland. The Western Tatras (Tatry Zachodnie), consisting of sedimentary rock and crystalline shale, are inhabited by such rare animals as brown bears, marmots and chamois.

Nutcracker

LAKELAND SCENERY

Crane

Europe, swans, grebes, cranes and cormorants.

The lakelands that cover much of northern Poland consist of picturesque moraine woodland and thousands of lakes. Largest and most scenic are the Great Mazurian Lakes, in a district known as the Land of a Thousand Lakes (Kraina Tysiąca Jezior). Abounding in forests, marshes and peat bogs, they are a haven for many bird species: the largest concentration of storks in

The crocus (Crocus sativus) blooms in early spring in mountain valleys and alpine meadows, mainly in the Tatras and Babia Góra ranges.

The silver thistle (Carlina acaulis) is a protected plant. Its leaves form a rosette containing a basket-like flower with a covering of dry, silvery leaves.

Bog arum (Calla palustris) is a poisonous perennial plant with a characteristic white leaf below a globular flower. It grows in peat bogs.

The great sundew (Drosera anglica), an insect-eating plant found in peat bogs, is a protected species in Poland.

Deer, which live in herds, are a relatively common sight in Poland's deciduous and mixed forests. They are hunted as game animals.

Marmots, rodents of the beaver family, live in the Tatra Mountains. They 'whistle' when disturbed.

Wild boar, widespread in Poland, are the ancestors of the domestic pig. Deciduous and mixed forests are their principal habitat.

Moose live in large forests, marshes and peat bogs, even near large cities. Large populations of them can be seen in Kampinoski National Park and in the Białystok region.

THE LOWLANDS

THE COAST

Hoopoe

The apparent monotony of the lowlands is broken by elevations, meandering rivers, marshes and peat bogs. Most of the land is under cultivation, but there are also extensive forests.

Białowieża Forest (see p291) shelters bison. Moose can be seen in the marshes and storks in the lakes.

Seagull

The sandy beaches of Poland's Baltic coast are among the finest in Europe. They are situated by sand dunes or cliffs, and were it not for river estuaries, it would be possible to walk along them for the entire length of the coast. Narrow sandy spits formed by the coastal currents and known as mierzeje are a characteristic feature of the shoreline.

The corn poppy (Papaver rhoeas) is becoming increasingly rare as it is weeded out from cereal crops.

Toadflax (Linaria vulgaris) has narrow leaves and yellow-orange flowers with a characteristic spur. It grows in ditches and on wasteland.

Lyme grass (Elymus arenarius) grows on the sand dunes. It has pointed leaves and its roots bind the sandy subsoil.

Marram grass (Ammophila arenaria) has narrow grey-green leaves, and flowers between June and August. Like lyme grass, it helps to bind the sand dunes where it grows.

Early Polish Architecture

A Romanesque capital

Over the centuries, and particularly during World War II, Poland lost a great deal of its architectural heritage. However, major efforts on the part of both private individuals and the government have meant that many important buildings have been restored, and in some cases completely rebuilt. Royal and aristocratic palaces, churches, castles and entire streets of old towns can thus be admired today. Traditional wooden buildings are another interesting feature of Polish architecture.

Renaissance courtyard at Wawel Royal Castle

ROMANESQUE ARCHITECTURE

The Romanesque style of architecture seen in Polish cathedrals, palace chapels and monasteries flourished largely as a result of the country's conversion to Christianity in the 10th century. Unfortunately, few Romanesque buildings have survived intact. Among those that have are the collegiate church at Tum near Łęczycza (see p229) and the monastery at Czerwińsk (see p114), both of which are decorated with stone carvings. The Romanesque style reached its apogee during the 12th century.

The collegiate church at Tum near Łęczycza, dating from the mid-12th century, is Poland's largest surviving Romanesque religious building.

This 12th-century Romanesque doorway is from the Cathedral of St Mary Magdalene (see p190).

GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE

Gothic elements began to appear in late Romanesque architecture in the early 13th century; this transitional style can be seen in the abbeys at Wąchock, Sulejów and Koprzywnica. By the end of the century, the Gothic style was prevalent throughout Polish architecture. Many fortified castles were built at this time, more than 80 being founded by Kazimierz the Great. Notable examples are those at Będzin, Ogrodzieniec and Bobolice (see pp158–9). Gothic churches and monasteries were also built throughout the country, fine examples surviving in Cracow and Wrocław. The oldest surviving wooden churches, such as that at Dębno, date from the same period. In Polish provincial architecture, the Gothic style persisted until the early 17th century.

The 15th-century church at Dębno (see p165) is one of the oldest surviving wooden churches in Poland.

The doorway of the early 15th-century Church of St Catherine in Cracow has an ornamental stepped frame.

THE RENAISSANCE AND MANNERISM

Renaissance architecture was introduced to Poland in the early 16th century by the Italian architect Bartolomeo Berrecci, who designed Wawel Royal Castle and the Zygmunt Chapel in Cracow. Many of the churches in Mazovia (as at Pułtusk and Płock) were influenced by the Italian Renaissance, as were the town halls in Poznań and Sandomierz. From the mid-16th century onwards, buildings in Pomerania were designed in the northern Mannerist style.

Decorative ceilings such as those in the churches of Lubelszczyzna and Kalisz illustrate provincial interpretations of Renaissance and Mannerist forms.

The Zygmunt Chapel (see p143) is one of the finest examples of Renaissance architecture in Poland.

ARCHITECTURE OF THE AGE OF THE TEUTONIC KNIGHTS

The Teutonic Knights, who ruled Eastern Pomerania and Prussia in the 13th and 14th centuries, left impressive brick-built Gothic buildings. The knights built defensive castles (such as those at Malbork, Gniez and Bytów) and city walls (as at Chełmno and Toruń), and founded numerous churches.

Later Polish Architecture

Buildings dating from the Baroque era are quite a common sight in Polish towns and cities. Many distinctive 19th-century residences and architectural ensembles are also noteworthy, as in Łódź. Around 1900, at a period coinciding with that of Art Nouveau, attempts to build in a Polish national style produced particularly felicitous results. Folk architecture is another area of great interest. The best way to explore it is to visit the skansens (open-air museums) which exist in each region of the country.

BAROQUE ARCHITECTURE

In the first half of the 17th century, architects of Italian descent started to introduce the early Baroque style to Poland. Nobles built imposing residences, chief among them Krzyżtopór Castle in Ujazd (see pp44-5 and p152), in the Mannerist style, and the fortified early Baroque palace in Łańcut (see pp172-3). Italian architects were also commissioned to design the Royal Palace in Warsaw, the country's new capital. The destruction wrought during the Polish-Swedish war was followed by a period of building in the late Baroque style. In Warsaw, the renowned Dutch architect Tylman van Gameren designed a large number of buildings, alongside Italian architects. During the rule of the Saxon kings in Poland, architects from Dresden designed many new buildings in Warsaw, as well as palaces like the one at Białystok (see p290).

This country house in Koszuty (see p211) is a typical example of an aristocrat's country seat in the Baroque style.

NEO-CLASSICISM

Neo-Classicism appeared in Poland after the rule of Stanisław August Poniatowski, the country's last king. The Royal Palace and Łazienki Palace in Warsaw were built in the Neo-Classical style, as were many others including those at Lubostroń and Śmiełów. Features included landscaped gardens in the English manner.

The town hall in Łowicz is an example of small-town public buildings in the Neo-Classical style of the early 19th century.

Lubostroń Palace (see p221) is a fine example of Palladianism, a refined Neo-Classical style imitating the work of the Italian Renaissance architect Andrea Palladio – in this case, his Villa Rotonda at Vicenza.

HISTORICISM AND MODERNISM

The second half of the 19th century saw a proliferation of Neo-Gothic, Neo-Renaissance and Neo-Baroque buildings. In the 1880s there was a movement towards creating an architecture in the Polish national style, which gave rise to some very picturesque structures. Art Nouveau was short-lived in Poland, although it did leave a number of attractive buildings, primarily in Łódź.

The wooden chapel at Jaszczurówka is an example of a building in the Polish national style.

The Warsaw School of Economics combines modern features and traditional elements.

TRADITIONAL ARCHITECTURE

Fine examples of wooden architecture can be found today at most skansens. Log cabins, often with thatched roofs, can still be seen in many villages in Poland.

The Literature of Poland

Wyspiański

Polish literature has always been inextricably linked to the historical development of the country, as the political situation, particularly over the last two centuries, has not always favoured freedom of speech. Many writers were forced to emigrate, while those who remained were often obliged to publish their works in other countries. Poland boasts four winners of the Nobel Prize for Literature: Henryk Sienkiewicz, Władysław S. Reymont, Czesław Miłosz and Wisława Szymborska.

THE MIDDLE AGES

Polish writing originates in the 11th century. The earliest works were in Latin, often written by people from other regions who copied hagiographies and holy chronicles. The oldest Polish chronicle, by the Benedictine monk Gall Anonim, dates from the beginning of the 12th century. Native Polish writers soon appeared, and Polish literature expanded into all the literary forms known in Europe at the time. The first work in the Polish language was written in the second half of the 13th century. The earliest religious song in Polish, The Mother of God (Bogurodzica), was probably written at the end of the 13th century, although it is not found in manuscript until the 15th century. The Polish Holy Cross Sermons (Kazania świętokrzyskie) date from around 1450.

RENAISSANCE AND BAROQUE

The Renaissance is regarded as the Golden Age of Polish literature, when both prose and poetry flourished. Mikołaj Rej (1505–69), the first significant writer in the Polish language, is generally regarded as the father of Polish literature. The most prominent poet of the time was Jan Kochanowski (1530–84), who wrote the first Polish tragedy, entitled The Dismissal of the Greek Envoys (Odprawa posłów greckich). He was also the author of the humorous Trifles (Fraszki) and the sorrowful Laments (Treny), a lament in the form of a cycle of 19 poems. Other notable figures among Poland's early poets are Mikołaj Sep Szarzyński (1550–81) and Szymon Szymonowicz (1558–1629).

The ancient Sarmatian culture had a great influence on Polish Baroque literature. The greatest works of the period are by Jan Chryzostom Pasek (1636–1701), who wrote highly colourful accounts both of great historical events and of the everyday life of the Polish nobility in the reign of Jan III Sobieski.

POLISH CINEMA

The first Polish feature film was made as early as 1902, but it was not until after World War II that Polish film-makers achieved international renown. The best-known Polish film directors include Andrzej Wajda, whose Man of Iron won the Palme d'Or at the 1981 Cannes Film Festival, Krzysztof Zanussi, Krzysztof Kiesłowski (Decalogue, Three Colours – Blue/White/Red) and Roman Polański (Chinatown), who has spent many years making films in the USA and France.

THE ENLIGHTENMENT AND THE 19TH CENTURY

The Enlightenment, and particularly the reign of the last king of Poland, Stanisław August Poniatowski, was an important period in the development of Polish literature. The first Polish novel, The Adventures of Mikołaj Doświadczyński (Mikołaja Doświadczyńskiego przygodki), was written by Bishop Ignacy Krasicki (1735–1801), a moralist and satirical poet.

Polish Romantic poetry played an important role in keeping nationalist sentiment alive. The outstanding writers of that time, Adam Mickiewicz, Juliusz Słowacki and Zygmunt Krasiński, wrote outside Poland. To this day, their work forms the canon of patriotic literature, whose jewel in the crown is Mickiewicz's Pan Tadeusz, which is both a nostalgic evocation of the vanishing traditions of the nobility and a vision of the emergence of more modern social attitudes. Also notable at this time was the comedy writer Aleksander Fredro, whose works include Revenge (Zemsta) and Husband and Wife (Mąż i Żona).

Another writer who holds a prominent place in the history of Polish Romantic literature is Cyprian Kamil Norwid, regarded as the precursor of modernism. Eliza Orzeszkowa (1840–1910) and Bolesław Prus (1847–1912) are the principal figures in the next phase of the development of the Polish novel.

Another major writer of this time was Henryk Sienkiewicz (1846–1916), best known in Poland for his trilogy of historical novels describing events in 17th-century Poland and The Teutonic Knights (Krzyżacy), which is devoted to the late 14th and early 15th centuries. Outside Poland, Sienkiewicz is better known for Quo Vadis?, which deals with the beginnings of Christianity and for which he was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1905.

A key role in this was played by Stanisław Wyspiański (1869–1907), author of the Symbolist play The Wedding (Wesele), which was made into a film by Andrzej Wajda 70 years later. Also influential in Young Poland was a Bohemian group surrounding Stanisław Przybyszewski, a friend of Henrik Ibsen and Edvard Munch.

Another Nobel laureate was Władysław Reymont (1865–1925), who wrote society novels. He was awarded the Nobel Prize in 1924 for The Peasants (Chłopy), which describes the lives of the inhabitants of a village near Łowicz. Between the wars, avant-garde writers such as Stanisław Ignacy Witkiewicz (aka Witkacy, 1885–1939), Bruno Schulz (1893–1942) and Witold Gombrowicz (1904–69) came to prominence.

Wisława Szymborska receiving the Nobel Prize for Literature

Polish literature after World War II spawned many famous writers, several of whom wrote from abroad for political reasons. Stanisław Lem wrote philosophical science fiction, which has been translated into many languages. His Solaris was made into a film twice – in 1972 by Andrei Tarkovsky and in 2002 by Steven Soderbergh. Tadeusz Różewicz, also well-known as a poet, and Sławomir Mrożek are prominent among playwrights. Hanna Krall and Ryszard Kapuściński are known for their documentary-writing. Andrzej Szczypiorski, who wrote A Mass for Arras (Msza za miasto Arras) and The Beginning (Początek), has also achieved international recognition. Contemporary poetry has a special place in Polish literature. Apart from Tadeusz Różewicz, its main exponents are Zbigniew Herbert, Ryszard Krynicki and Stanisław Barańczak. The best illustration of the achievements of contemporary Polish writers is the award of two recent Nobel Prizes: the 1980 prize, to Czesław Miłosz, and the 1996 prize, to the Cracow poetess Wisława Szymborska.

The Music of Poland

Poland has made a major contribution to the international music scene, as much through the works of great composers as through its renowned jazz musicians and colourful folk music. Polish classical composers such as Frédéric Chopin (1810–49), Stanisław Moniuszko (1819–72), Karol Szymanowski (1882–1937) and Wojciech Kilar (born 1932) have often been inspired by folk music, as have modern jazz and rock musicians. Poland has also given the world such outstanding musical performers as the tenor Jan Kiepura and the pianists Artur Rubinstein and Witold Małcużyński.

EARLY MUSIC

Although they are not widely known, there is much of interest in the works of early Polish composers. Mikołaj z Radomia, a composer of the first half of the 15th century, produced both religious and secular works. In the Renaissance, composers such as Wacław z Szamotuł and Mikołaj Gomółka brought Polish music into the European mainstream. The first Polish opera stage was set up in the 17th century at the court of Władysław IV. Court and religious music flourished at that time, and the works of such composers as Adam Jarzębski, Stanisław S. Szarzyński and Marcin Mielczewski are still widely performed by Polish musicians today.

THE 19TH AND 20TH CENTURIES

The most prominent Polish composer of the Romantic era was undoubtedly Frédéric Chopin (1810–49), who composed almost exclusively for the piano. Chopin contributed to the establishment of a Polish national style in music, and exerted a great influence on the development of European piano music. During his short life he composed a large number of preludes, mazurkas, polonaises, waltzes, études and other pieces. Many of Chopin's works contain elements of folk music. The Chopin Piano Competition, held in Warsaw, has been a regular event since 1927, and award-winners have gone on to become world-famous pianists.

Stanisław Moniuszko is regarded as the father of the Polish national opera. His most famous operas are Halka, inspired by highland folklore, and The Haunted House (Straszny dwór), which evokes the traditions of the Polish nobility.

In the second half of the 19th century, the violinist Henryk Wieniawski and the pianist Ignacy Paderewski achieved world renown. The latter was also prominent in politics, serving for a time as Prime Minister of Poland.

Before World War I, the town of Zakopane was a major centre of Polish culture. It drew not only artists but also composers who sought inspiration from the landscape of the Tatra Mountains and the colourful folklore of the highland dwellers. Among composers associated with Zakopane is Mieczysław Karłowicz (1876–1909), noted especially for his symphonies. Karłowicz perished tragically in an avalanche in the Tatras at the young age of 33. Another frequent visitor to Zakopane was Karol Szymanowski, whose fascination with the folk music of the region inspired him to compose a number of works, including the ballet Harnasie.

One of the best-known modern composers is Krzysztof Penderecki (b. 1933), whose oeuvre includes epic symphonies, oratorios and operas. His opera The Devils of Loudun (Diabły z Loudun) has been performed all over the world. Other prominent composers of international standing are Andrzej Panufnik (1914–91), Witold Lutosławski (1913–94) and Henryk Górecki (b. 1933), whose works include the outstanding Symphony No. 3, which has topped the classical music charts for years. Other major composers of symphonic music are Wojciech Kilar (b. 1932) and Zbigniew Preisner (b. 1955), most widely known for their film music.

JAZZ

Jazz traditions in Poland go back to the time of the Second Republic. After World War II, jazz was deemed by the authorities to be “alien to the working class”, and it was not until 1956 that jazz could be performed in public. An important jazz musician of that time was the pianist and composer Krzysztof Komeda (1931–69), who wrote the popular lullaby for Roman Polański’s film, Rosemary’s Baby.

During the 1960s, other jazz musicians came to prominence, including Adam Makowicz, Tomasz Stańko and Michał Urbaniak. Jazz clubs opened throughout the country, and the Warsaw Jazz Jamboree, first held in 1958, became the world’s biggest jazz festival. Another renowned festival is Jazz on the Oder, held in Wrocław.

Many jazz musicians came to public recognition in the 1970s and 1980s, among them the pianist and saxophonist Włodzimierz Nahorny, the saxophonists Zbigniew Namysłowski and Janusz Muniak, and the pianist Sławomir Kulpowicz.

FOLK MUSIC

Polish folk music is unusually colourful. Every region has its own specific tradition, and the music of the Tatra Mountains is unique. Folk bands play quite a basic range of instruments, the main one being the fiddle, and sometimes bagpipes or drums and basses. Depending on the region these instruments are supplemented by clarinets, horns, accordions and occasionally dulcimers.

The best way of getting to know and enjoy Polish folk music is to attend some of the concerts traditionally held during the summer months, such as the Kazimierz or Zakopane festivals. Here there is a chance to listen to live music being played and to watch the dance groups that perform in colourful folk costumes.

Polish vocal and dance groups have brought worldwide popularity to Polish folk music. The Mazowsze group, for example, gives stage performances that are inspired by the folk traditions of various regions.

The Traditional Nobility

Aristocratic figurine in porcelain

The tradition of the Polish nobility was dominated by the idea of Sarmatism, which was based on the myth that the Polish aristocracy were descended from a warrior people called the Sarmatians. Sarmatism was influential in shaping the ideology of the ruling class, as well as its customs and lifestyle. A Sarmatian embraced the old order, was patriotic and Catholic, and at the same time valued freedom and privilege, lived life as a landowner and upheld family traditions. Sarmatism played an important part in art and literature, particularly memoirs.

A kulawka was a special toast goblet for drinking "bottoms up", as it could only be set down on its rim.

Noblemen's houses were typically single-storey buildings fronted by an imposing colomnade. Rooms flanked the central entrance hall.

A TRADITIONAL BEVERAGE

Mead was a favourite drink of the Polish aristocracy. It is made by fermenting wort, a solution of honey and water that has been flavoured with herbs. The most popular type of mead is trójniak, in which honey makes up one-third of the total wort. The rarest is półtorak, with two parts honey and one part water. Although mead is no longer widely drunk, it is still produced today.

POLISH NATIONAL DRESS

Required attire of the nobility in the Baroque era, its main elements were the żupan (a kind of shirt) and the kontusz (an outer garment tied with a waist-band). Headgear took the form of either a kopak (fur hat) or a square-bottomed rogatywka. Men wore their hair short and sported a moustache, and sometimes a beard.

The kontusz was an outer garment with cutout sleeves, which were thrown over the shoulders.

The kabela was a traditional sword that had a single-sided blade and a highly ornamented handle, often with inlaid precious stones.

COATS OF ARMS

The coats of arms of aristocratic families in Poland number no more than about 200. They were held in common by members of clans with different names. Aristocratic titles were not used at the time of the Republic (with the exception of the titles of Lithuanian princes), while magnate families looked to foreign rulers for titles. Polish heraldic symbols usually had their origins in individual symbols; they were therefore relatively simple and differed from those of Western Europe.

Silk sashes known as kontusze were an indispensable part of a nobleman's attire. Several yards in length, they were worn wrapped around the waist and tied in a decorative knot, allowing the tassels to hang downwards.

The Different Religions of Poland

Roadside shrine

Although the majority of the Polish population today is Roman Catholic, in the course of the country's history its inhabitants have adhered to a variety of faiths. Besides Roman Catholics, there have been Orthodox Christians, Uniates and Jews (most of whom lost their lives in World War II), and, since the 16th century, Lutheran and Calvinist Protestants. When the Polish borders were redrawn after World War II, a large section of the Eastern Orthodox population found itself in Belarus or the Ukraine. At the same time, the western border moved further westwards, incorporating many German Protestant churches. The wide variety of Poland's ecclesiastical architecture bears witness to the many cultures and religions that have existed there.

Orthodox Christians today are found mainly in the eastern parts of the country, where many of their historic churches still stand.

The Evangelical Reform Church in Warsaw was built after the Reformation and used by the small group of Calvinist believers in Poland.

The Basilica of the Holy Cross and the Birth of the Holy Mother (Bazylika Krzyża Świętego i Narodzenia Matki Boskiej) has the tallest church tower in Poland.

The cemetery at Kruszyniany, one of the few Muslim burial grounds in Poland, is used by people of Tartar descent.

The Convent of the Old Believers at Wojnowo is one of the few places where this religious group can still be found.

The 'Church of Peace' (Kościół Pokoju) at Świdnica was one of three churches to be built specifically for Silesian Protestants after the Thirty Years' War, which ended in 1648.

CZĘSTOCHOWA PILGRIMAGE

The Monastery of Jasna Góra in Częstochowa is the most important Catholic shrine in Poland – and one of the greatest in the Christian world. The image of Our Lady of Częstochowa, also known as the Black Madonna, draws pilgrims all year round. The main pilgrimage, which attracts hundreds of thousands of believers from Poland and beyond, is held in the meadows at the foot of the monastery on 15 August each year.

OTHER DENOMINATIONS

Some of Poland's historic churches have changed denomination over the years – for instance, when Polish Catholics took over disused Protestant churches. Although the original interiors have generally not survived, the exteriors have often been carefully conserved. Some religious denominations no longer have followers in Poland, although their places of worship remain. An example is the Mennonite chapel in Gdańsk.

Judaic artifacts in museums are poignant vestiges of the synagogues that were once so numerous in Poland. As a result of the Holocaust and the ensuing communist era, there are few Jews in Poland today.

The picturesque wooden churches of the Ukrainian Uniates, or Greek Catholics, built for the Lemk and the Boyk minorities, survive in the Carpathian Mountains. Their congregations were resettled in other areas during Operation Vistula after World War II.

POLAND THROUGH THE YEAR

Tourists tend to visit Poland in the summer, between June and September. During that period, the most popular tourist spots are crowded, and a variety of open-air events, from street theatre festivals to re-enactments of medieval tournaments, take place throughout the country. The main music and drama festivals are held in spring and autumn. The best way of spending winter in Poland is skiing in the mountains. As the majority of Poles are Catholics, traditional Catholic feast days are the most important holidays. The celebrations that take place at Christmas, Easter, and Corpus Christi as well as other local church festivals are interesting spectacles for tourists.

APRIL

Palm Sunday (the Sunday before Easter) is the day when “palms” are blessed in the churches. The most colourful celebrations take place in villages in Kurpie and Małopolska – in particular Rabka, Lipnica Murowana and Tokarnia. During Holy Week (the week leading up to Easter), mystery plays are performed in churches around the country. The oldest and best-known spectacle is Chwalebne Misterium Pańskie, a passion play which has been performed in Kalwaria Zebrzydowska (see p161) since the 17th century. On Holy Saturday, Easter food is taken to church in baskets and blessed. Visits are also made to symbolic sepulchres in churches.

Easter Sunday is the most important Catholic holiday, when the grandest mass is held to mark the Resurrection.

THE HISTORY OF POLAND

Poland's borders have changed almost continuously with the course of history. The origins of the Polish nation go back to the 10th century, when Slav tribes living in the area of Gniezno united together under the Piast dynasty, which then ruled Poland until 1370.

Mieszko I, the first historic prince of this line, converted to Christianity in 966, bringing his kingdom into Christian Europe. The Piast dynasty ruled Poland with variable fortune and embroiled the nation in domestic quarrels for 150 years. After this dynasty died out, the great Lithuanian prince Jagiełło took the Polish throne and founded a new dynasty. The treaty with Lithuania signed at Krewo in 1385 initiated the long process of consolidation between these nations, culminating in 1569 with the signing of the Union of Lublin. In the 15th century the Jagiellonians achieved many military successes, forming the powerful Republic of Two Nations (Rzeczpospolita Obojga Narodów). After the Jagiellonian dynasty died out in 1572, the authorities introduced elective kings, with the nobility having the right to vote. Poland's political and military weakness led to its partitioning by Russia, Prussia and Austria. In 1795 Poland was wiped off the map of Europe for more than 100 years. Attempts to wrest independence by insurrection were unsuccessful, and Poland did not regain its sovereignty until 1918. The arduous process of rebuilding and uniting the nation was still incomplete when, at the outbreak of World War II, a six-year period of German and Soviet occupation began. The price that Poland paid was very high: millions were murdered, including virtually its entire Jewish population. The country suffered devastation and there were huge territorial losses, which were only partly compensated by the Allies' decision to move the border westwards. After the war, Poland was subjugated by the Soviet Union and did not become a fully democratic nation until 1989.

During the 6th century AD, Slav tribes began migrating from the east to what is today Polish territory. The Vistulians (Wiślanie) settled around Cracow, and the Poles (Polanie) around Gniezno. The Polanie united under the rule of the Piast dynasty in the 10th century, and the conversion of Mieszko I (c. 960–92) to Christianity in 966 led to the formation of the Polish state. After Mieszko, Bolesław the Brave (992–1025) acquired significant new territories. Later Piast kings ruled with variable fortune. On the death of Bolesław the Wry-Mouthed (1107–38), the nation was divided into districts, not to be reunified until the reign of Władysław the Elbow-High (1306–33). The country flourished under the rule of his son, Kazimierz the Great (1333–70).

This 14th-century sculpture from the collection in the Collegium Maius in Cracow depicts Kazimierz the Great, who "found Poland of wood, and left it in stone".

VESTIGES OF THE PIAST DYNASTY

The Piast dynasty witnessed the development of Romanesque and early Gothic architecture. Romanesque churches have survived in Tum (see p229), Czerwińsk (see p114) and Tyniec (see p145). The abbey in Sulejów, Wąchock (see p152) and Koprzywnica date from the 13th century. Some of the Gothic castles of Kazimierz the Great can be seen in the Jura region – for example at Będzin, Olsztyn and Bobolice (see pp158–9).

The Crypt of St Leonard is a vestige of the Romanesque cathedral at Wawel Royal Castle in Cracow (see pp138–9).

The treaty signed in Krewo in 1385 uniting the Polish and the Lithuanian states proved to be a decisive moment in the history of Central Europe. The great Lithuanian prince Władysław Jagiełło received the hand of Jadwiga, the young and beautiful queen of Poland, and was crowned king of Poland. Jadwiga died in 1399, but the relationship between Poland and Lithuania established by the Union of Krewo was gradually strengthened. Jagiełło founded the Jagiellonian dynasty and, by the reign of Kazimierz the Jagiellonian in the mid-15th century, Poland and Lithuania had come to be the greatest power in central Europe. The Jagiellonian kings also ruled the Czech nations and Hungary.

In one of the greatest medieval battles, on 15 July 1410, Poland and Lithuania, with their Ruthenic allies, routed the armies of the Teutonic Knights, who never regained their former might. The scene is depicted in this painting by Jan Matejko of 1878.

GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE

Many late Gothic buildings have survived in Poland. Among the most important are the Collegium Maius and the Barbican in Cracow (see p133). After the formation of Royal Prussia, many parish churches were built in the towns lying within its territory, the largest being the Church of St Mary in Gdańsk (see pp238–9).

The imposing twin-tower façade of the Church of St Mary reflects Cracow's former status (see p132).

In the 16th century the Republic of Two Nations (Rzeczpospolita) formed by Poland and Lithuania was one of the largest European powers. In the western territories of the Polish Crown there was peace, relative prosperity and – rare elsewhere – religious tolerance. Under the Jagiellonians, and later under the first elective kings, art, education and the economy flourished. In the political sphere there was a significant movement to improve the Republic and institute reforms.

The so-called real union between Poland and Lithuania was concluded in Lublin in 1569. At that time, in terms of language, nationality and religion, the Republic was the most diverse state in Europe.

The “Silver” 17th Century

Statue of
Jan III Sobieski

The 17th century was dominated by the wars that the Republic of Two Nations waged against the Swedes, Russia and the Ottoman Empire. An uprising in the Ukraine in 1648 marked the beginning of a series of catastrophes. In 1655 the Republic of Two Nations was invaded and largely occupied by the Swedes. Although it was short-lived, the Swedish occupation – known as the Deluge (Potop) – wreaked havoc. The final triumph of the Republic of Two Nations was the victory against the Turks at the Battle of Vienna in 1683, during the reign of Jan III Sobieski. The country eventually emerged from the wars without major territorial losses, but it was considerably weakened and its dominance was over.

In the first half of the 17th century, dazzling residences were built in the Republic of Two Nations. The most splendid was the eccentric castle in Ujazd. Built at great expense, it stood for barely 11 years. It was demolished in 1655 by the Swedes and remains in ruins to this day (see p152).

17TH-CENTURY ARCHITECTURE

Many magnificent buildings in the late Mannerist and early Baroque styles were erected in the first half of the 17th century, during the reign of the Vasa dynasty. After the destruction wrought by the Swedish Deluge, there was no further artistic flowering until the reign of Jan III Sobieski. The early Baroque castles – for example, the Royal Palace in Warsaw (see pp64–5) – as well as numerous churches, of which the most impressive are the Jesuit churches in Cracow, Warsaw and Poznań, are all splendid examples of the architecture of this period.

The Bishops' Palace in Kielce (see p150) is the best-preserved early Baroque residence.

Order of Military Virtue

In the first half of the 18th century, Poland was ruled by the Wettin dynasty of Saxony. Polish interests were gradually subordinated to those of neighbouring powers, and the election of Stanisław August Poniatowski as king, supported by the Tsarina Catherine the Great, sealed the nation's fate. Attempts to counteract Russian influence came to an end with the First Partition of Poland in 1772. The efforts of the patriotic faction and the achievements of the Four-Year Sejm changed little. The Second Partition followed in 1793, and when the uprising led by Tadeusz Kościuszko – the final attempt to save the country – was quashed, Poland lost its statehood for over 100 years.

18TH-CENTURY ARCHITECTURE

During the 18th century – the era of the late Baroque and Rococo – artists and architects from Saxony joined those who had already come to Poland from Italy. Many palaces, including Radziwiłł, were built in Warsaw and the provinces, such as Białystok (see p290). Thanks to the patronage of Stanisław August Poniatowski, many Neo-Classical buildings were created, among them Łazienki in Warsaw.

Eclectic

Deprived of its independence, Poland became a territory for exploitation as though it were a colony. The hopes vested in Napoleon proved illusory. The transitory Grand Duchy of Warsaw lasted only eight years. The failure of the successive November and January insurrections (1831 and 1863) led to further restrictions by the tsarist rulers: landed property was confiscated and cultural and educational institutions dissolved. Many Poles tried to help the country from abroad. The collapse of the partitioning empires in World War I enabled Poland to regain its independence in 1918.

Poland regained its independence in 1918, but for several years afterwards battles raged over its borders. In 1920, independence was again threatened by the Red Army. Despite domestic conflicts, Poland made considerable economic progress. The territories of the three areas previously held by Russia, Austria and Prussia were consolidated. The country's brief period of independence ended in 1939 with the German and Soviet invasions. Poland was occupied and its population persecuted, terrorized and partially exterminated. About 7 million Poles were killed, including 3 million Polish Jews (see p160). An underground state operated, with the Home Army answering to the government in exile. Polish soldiers fought the Germans on all fronts.

On 1 August 1944 the underground Home Army (Armia Krajowa) launched an uprising in Warsaw against the occupying Germans. Its aim was to liberate the capital before the arrival of the Red Army. The Russians were waiting on the left bank of the river, allowing the Germans to suppress the outburst. The uprising lasted over two months and led to the complete destruction of the city as well as the loss of tens of thousands of lives.

In 1945 the allies agreed that Poland should be included in the Soviet zone of influence. The Big Three (Britain, the USA and the Soviet Union) also decided to alter Poland's borders. The Rulers of Poland

At the time of its formation in 966, the Polish nation was ruled by the Piast dynasty. Bolesław the Brave, son of Mieszko I, was the first king of Poland. During the Period of Disunity from 1138, rulers bore only the title of prince. The first prince to be crowned king of Poland was Przemysław II. After the death of Kazimierz the Great, the Polish crown passed to Louis of Hungary of the Angevin dynasty. The marriage of his daughter Jadwiga to the Lithuanian prince Jagiełło in 1384 established the Jagiellonian dynasty. From 1572 the Republic of Two Nations was ruled by elective kings with no hereditary rights. The last king was Stanisław August Poniatowski.

Warsaw at a Glance

Most places of interest are located in the centre of Warsaw. This area not only forms the geographical heart of the city, but is also Warsaw's largest municipality. It is made up of seven smaller districts, Śródmieście being the central one. In the pages that follow, however, Warsaw is divided into three parts: the Old and New Towns, the Royal Route and the City Centre. The most interesting historical features of Warsaw are located along the Royal Route (Trakt Królewski), a series of roads linking the Old Town (Stare Miasto) and the Royal Castle (Zamek Królewski) with the Water Palace (Łazienki) and Wilanów, the palace of Jan III Sobieski, which stands just outside the city.

The Old Town Square, surrounded by town houses rebuilt after wartime destruction, is one of the most beautiful features of Warsaw. It teems with tourists and local people throughout the year. A statue of the Mermaid, symbol of Warsaw, was recently erected in the centre of the square.

The Palace of Culture is still the tallest building in Warsaw, despite the ongoing construction of skyscrapers in the city. The 30th floor has a viewing terrace as well as a multimedia tourist centre.

The buildings on the north side of Theatre Square were recently refurbished. They now house banks and luxury shops, as well as the little church of St Albert and St Andrzej, which contains important works of art.

THE OLD AND NEW TOWNS

The Old Town (Stare Miasto), partially surrounded by medieval walls, is the oldest district in Warsaw. It was founded at the turn of the 13th and 14th centuries, growing up around the castle of the Mazovian princes. Its medieval urban layout survives to this day. The pride of the Old Town is the market square with colourful town houses. Also of major interest are the Cathedral of St John and the Royal Castle, which was destroyed by German forces in 1944 and rebuilt between 1971 and 1984. Next to the Old

Traditional house decoration

Town is the more recent New Town (Nowe Miasto), which became a separate urban entity in 1408. The reconstruction of the Old Town and New Town, almost completely destroyed during the war, was an undertaking on a scale unprecedented in the whole of Europe. Today, these two districts are the most popular tourist attractions in Warsaw. The Old Town pulsates with life until late evening. There are many interesting little streets and an abundance of cafés, good restaurants and antique shops.

The Old Town

The Old Town Square (Rynek Starego Miasta) is surrounded on all sides by town houses, rebuilt after World War II with great devotion. Today it is one of the most attractive places in Warsaw. From spring to autumn it is filled with café tables, and also becomes an open-air gallery of contemporary art. On the square and in neighbouring streets, especially Piwna and Jezuicka, there are numerous restaurants and bars that are reputed to be the best in Warsaw. The whole of the Old Town is not only a tourist attraction but also a favourite place for local people, who go to walk there, and for lovers to meet.

Zygmunt's Column, in the centre of Plac Zamkowy, is the oldest secular statue in Warsaw. It was erected in 1644 by Zygmunt III's son Władysław IV. The monument, which stands 22 m (72 ft) high, consists of a Corinthian granite column supported on a tall plinth and topped with a bronze statue of the ruler, who is depicted with a cross in his left hand and a sword in his right. The figure is the work of Clemente Molli, and the whole monument was designed by Augustyn Locci the Elder and Constantino Tencalla, two Italian architects working for the king. This monument, unusual in European terms, glorifies the secular ruler in a manner which had until then been reserved for saints and other religious subjects. Despite repeated damage and repairs, the statue retains its original appearance. The column on which it stands, however, has already been replaced twice. An older, fractured shaft can be seen on the terrace near the south façade of the Palace Under the Tin Roof.

Royal Castle 2

from 1777

The decision to build the Royal Castle (Zamek Królewski) was made when Zygmunt III Vasa moved the capital from Cracow to Warsaw in 1596. It was built in the early Baroque style by the Italian architects Giovanni Trevano, Giacomo Rodondo and Matteo Castelli between 1598 and 1619, incorporating the earlier castle of the Mazovian princes. Successive rulers remodelled the castle many times. The late Baroque façade overlooking the River Vistula dates from the time of August III, and the splendid interiors from that of Stanisław August. Completely destroyed by the Germans during World War II, the castle was reconstructed from 1971 to 1988.

Cathedral of St John ③

The Cathedral of St John started life as a parish church at the beginning of the 15th century, only acquiring cathedral status in 1798. Over the years, successive rulers endowed it with new chapels and other elements. Important ceremonies have taken place here, including the coronation of Stanisław August Poniatowski in 1764 and the oath of allegiance to the Constitution of 3 May in 1791. Many famous Poles are buried in the cathedral, among them the Polish primate, Cardinal Stefan Wyszyński. Having been seriously damaged in World War II, the cathedral was rebuilt; its new façade was designed by Jan Zachwatowicz in the spirit of Mazovian Gothic architecture.

This Mannerist-Baroque church was built for the Jesuit order between 1609 and 1629, at the same time as the monastery. Although it had a somewhat chequered history, it survived without major changes until 1944, when it was almost completely destroyed. When it was rebuilt after World War II, the church's somewhat unusual architecture was restored on the basis of the original plans, which had survived. Located in a narrow space, it has a unique layout; especially original is the way in which the chancel is flooded by light falling from the lantern in the elliptical dome over the apse. The crypt, which contains a stone-cutter's workshop, is in the space once occupied by the basements of the Gothic town houses that stood on the site.

The existing post-Augustan Church is the result of two major reconstructions in the Baroque style, carried out in 1631–6 and in the first half of the 18th century. The latter phase of rebuilding took place under the direction of architect Károl Bay, who designed the undulating façade. The late Baroque decoration of the interior was destroyed in 1944. Only a partially burned crucifix survived. After the war, the interior was minutely restored to a design by Sister Alma Skrzydlewska and the crucifix incorporated into a modern design. In the 1980s, the church was a meeting place for the political opposition to the Communist government.

Until the end of the 18th century, this rectangular market square was the most important place in Warsaw. The houses around the square were built by the most affluent members of the community. Most of them date from the 1600s, and it is these that give the square its period character. In the centre there was once a town hall, a weigh house and stalls, all demolished in 1817. In their place now stands a statue of the Mermaid (Syrenka).

Each row of houses bears the name of one of the people involved in the Four-Year Sejm. On the north side is Dekerta – named after Jan Dekert, mayor of Warsaw in the 18th century. All the houses are interconnected and now host the Historical Museum of Warsaw, which displays typical interiors of townspeople's homes and craftsmen's studios.

The Barbican and City Walls ⑦

ul. Nowomiejska. Map 2 D2.

Warsaw is one of the few European capitals where a large portion of the old city wall survives. Construction of the wall began in the first half of the 14th century and continued in phases up to the mid-16th century. A double circumvallation, reinforced with fortresses and towers, encircled the town. The earliest part of the fortifications is the Barbican, erected around 1548 by Gianbattista of Venice. It was built on the site of an earlier outer gate and was intended to defend the Nowomiejska Gate (Brama Nowomiejska). The northern part of this defensive building, in the form of a dungeon reinforced by four semicircular towers, survived as the external wall of a town house. After World War II, parts of the wall were rebuilt and the Barbican, which had ceased to exist for a long period, was restored to its full scale.

New Town

The New Town took shape at the beginning of the 15th century along the route leading from Old Warsaw to Zakroczym. Of interest here are the Pauline, Franciscan, Dominican and Redemptorist churches and the Church of the Holy Sacrament, which were all rebuilt after World War II, and the colourful reconstructed town houses. Ulica Mostowa, the steepest street in Warsaw, leads up to the fortress that defended one of the longest bridges in 16th-century Europe.

The little wooden Church of the Holy Spirit (Kościół św. Ducha) already existed in the 14th century. Repeatedly extended, it was burned down during the Swedish invasion in 1655. As the townspeople could not afford to rebuild the church, King Jan Kazimierz donated the site to the Pauline fathers from Częstochowa, who were renowned for defending their monastery at Jasna Góra (see pp156–7). In return, and at their own expense, the monks built a wall that enclosed the church and the monastery within Warsaw's defences.

The present church was built in 1707–17, based on a design by the architect Józef Piola. The work was directed by Józef Szymon Bellotti and later Karol Ceroni. The interior was completed in 1725.

Rebuilt after war damage, the church is known today – as it has been since 1711 – as the main starting point for pilgrimages to the shrine of the Virgin Mary at Jasna Góra.

In Ulica Długa, a small Neo-Classical house abuts the church. It was built at the beginning of the 19th century on the smallest plot in Warsaw; it occupies only a few square metres and has its own registry number.

Raczynski Palace (Pałac Raczynskich), rebuilt in 1786 to a design by the royal architect Jan Chrystian Kamsetzer, houses the Old Records Archive. The most beautiful feature of this former residence is the early Neo-Classical ballroom – damaged in the war but restored afterwards – which is decorated with stucco work and allegorical paintings on the theme of Justice.

The subject of the paintings was manifestly at odds with the sentiments of the residence's owner, Kazimierz Raczynski, who held high office in the royal court and was considered a traitor to his country by his contemporaries. In the 19th century, the palace was the seat of the Government Justice Commission, and in the interwar period, of the Ministry of Justice.

Particularly tragic events occurred here during World War II. Bullet marks in the wall of the building are evidence of the street execution of 50 local inhabitants who were arrested at random on 24 January 1944. But the worst crimes were committed here during the Warsaw Uprising. On 13 August 1944 a tank-trap exploded, killing some 80 insurgents, and on 2 September the Nazi SS killed several hundred injured people in the building, which was being used as a hospital.

The sculptures represent soldiers – one group defending the barricades, the other going down into the sewers. (The insurgents used the sewer system to move around Warsaw during the uprising.) The entrance to one such sewer is still to be found near the monument.

It was in front of this monument, during the celebrations marking the 50th anniversary of the uprising, that the President of the Federal Republic of Germany, Richard Herzog, apologized to the Polish nation for the unleashing of World War II by the Third Reich and the bloody suppression of the Warsaw Uprising.

At the beginning of the 17th century, while the Jesuits were building a Baroque church in Old Town, the Dominicans started work on a Gothic chancel for the Church of St Jacek (Kościół św Jacka). They returned to the Gothic style partly because of the conservatism of Mazovian buildings and partly in an attempt to endow the church with the appearance of age, so as to create an illusion of the age-old traditions of the order – which had in fact only been set up in Warsaw in 1603. When work was interrupted by a plague that raged in Warsaw in 1625, the few remaining monks listened to confessions and gave communion through openings drilled in the doors. The work

Interesting features inside the church, rebuilt after World War II, include the beautiful vaulting above the aisles, the Gothic chancel, decorated with stuccowork of the Lublin type, and the 17th-century tombstones shattered in 1944. The Baroque tomb of Adam and Małgorzata Kotowski, by the Dutch architect Tylman van Gameren, is also noteworthy. The domed chapel in which it stands is decorated with portraits, painted on tin plate, of the donors, who became prosperous and were ennobled despite their humble origins.

The heart of the New Town is the market square (Rynek Nowego Miasta). Once rectangular, it acquired its odd triangular shape after reconstruction. When the town hall, which stood in the centre of the square, was demolished in 1818, a splendid view of the Baroque dome which crowns the Church of St Kazimierz was opened up. Destroyed in 1944, the church was rebuilt in a manner reminiscent of the 18th century, though not exactly replicating the original. The façades of many buildings around the square are covered with Socialist Realist murals. A charming 19th-century well is to be found near Ulica Preta.

The Church and Convent of the Order of the Holy Sacrament, designed by Tylman van Gameren, was built in 1688–92 by King Jan III Sobieski and Queen Maria Kazimiera. The remarkable domed building is distinguished by its clear Baroque architecture of classic proportions. The interior, which was damaged in the war, has since been renovated. Previously polychrome, it is now white. The most beautiful reconstructed feature is the tomb of Maria Karolina, Princesse de Bouillon, granddaughter of Jan III Sobieski. It was installed in 1746 by Bishop Andrzej Załuski and Prince Michał Kazimierz Radziwiłł, a well-known reveller who once, unsuccessfully, sought her hand in marriage. The tomb features a fractured shield and a crown falling into an abyss – references to the Sobieski coat of arms and the death of the last member of the royal line. At the rear of the convent a garden, unchanged since the 17th century, descends in tiers to the River Vistula below.

The brick tower of the Church of the Visitation of the Virgin Mary (Kościół Nawiedzenia NMP) rises over the roofs of the houses on the bank of the River Vistula. This church is the oldest in the New Town. It was built at the beginning of the 15th century by the Mazovian princess, Anna, wife of Janusz I, the Elder, and is reputed to stand on the site of a pagan sacred spot.

Restoration carried out in the 19th century changed the building's appearance several times.

Damaged during World War II, it was subsequently rebuilt in the 15th-century Gothic style. The vaulting above the chancel was completed by medieval methods: that is, it was filled by hand, without the use of pre-fabricated moulds.

In the cemetery next to the church there stands a modern statue of Walerian

THE ROYAL ROUTE

The Royal Route (Trakt Królewski) is so named because of the former royal residences that line it. It stretches from Belvedere Palace (Belweder), up to the Old Town, along Aleje Ujazdowskie, through Nowy Świat and on to Krakowskie Przedmieście. This part of Warsaw has been largely rebuilt after destruction suffered in World War II. On Aleje Ujazdowskie there are beautiful parks and little palaces surrounded by gardens, most of which now house embassies. The Neo-Classical Nowy Świat, its wide pavements decorated in summer with baskets of flowers, is lined with cafés and elegant shops. The most impressive buildings are on Krakowskie Przedmieście. This splendid location on the edge of the escarpment inspired powerful citizens to build large houses with gardens. Many churches and monasteries were also located here, as well as the president's residence and university buildings. In the street itself, there are statues of distinguished Poles. In summer, fêtes and bazaars are often organized along the Royal Route.

Krakowskie Przedmieście

Krakowskie Przedmieście is undoubtedly one of the most beautiful streets in Warsaw. Rebuilt after the war, the magnificent palaces that lie along it now generally house government departments. There are also pleasant restaurants, bars and cafés. The street is lined with trees, green squares and little palaces with courtyards. On weekdays, Krakowskie Przedmieście is one of the liveliest streets in Warsaw, as two great institutions of higher education are situated here: the University of Warsaw and the Academy of Fine Arts.

This Gothic church was built for the Bernardine order by Anna, widow of the Mazovian prince Bolesław III, in the second half of the 15th century. It was extended between 1518 and 1533. Destroyed during the Swedish invasion in 1655–60, it was rebuilt in a Baroque style to a design by Józef Szymon Bellotti. The Gothic chancel and the external walls were retained. The Neo-Classical façade, by Chrystian Piotr Aigner and Stanisław Kostka Potocki, is a later addition.

When the monastery was closed in 1864, the church became a religious academic institution, a role that it maintains to this day. The relics of St Ładysław of Gielniów, one of the patron saints of Warsaw, are preserved in a side chapel. The magnificent interior of the church has polychrome paintings by Walenty Zebrowski and a series of Rococo altars. In the monastery, part of which dates from the 16th century, the crystalline vaulting in the cloisters has survived.

This statue of Poland's most distinguished Romantic poet was unveiled in 1898, on the centenary of his birth. Erecting the statue during the period of intense Russification that followed the January Insurrection of 1863 was a great achievement on the part of the committee in charge of the project, led by Michał Radziwiłł and Henryk Sienkiewicz. The statue was designed by Cyprian Godebski, and the plinth by Józef Pius Dziekoński and Władysław Marconi. It was set up in a square off Krakowskie Przedmieście that was once lined with houses flanked by side streets. The houses were later demolished and the road widened. Only the statue of the Mother of God of Passau, dating from 1683, on the edge of the square, survives. It was made in the workshop of Szymon Bellotti to a commission from Jan III Sobieski as an offering in thanks for a Polish victory at the Battle of Vienna and for the protection of the royal family.

war damage, the church, consisting of a nave with interconnecting side chapels and a transept, has many of its original features. The main altar, with sculptures by Jan Jerzy Płersch, is beautiful. Płersch also carved the sculptural group of the Visitation of the Virgin, a very sophisticated and Romantic piece which was transferred from an earlier Dominican church and can now be seen on the altar near the rood arch. Also noteworthy are the Baroque paintings, especially the two small works in the side altars near the chancel, by Szymon Czechowicz.

During the Northern War of 1705, Stanisław Leszczyński held peace negotiations with Charles XII in the church. From 1864, after the closure of the monastery, the monastic buildings housed a seminary.

The palace owes its elegant Neo-Classical form to refurbishment carried out by Chrystian Piotr Aigner in 1918–19. However, this work conceals much older walls, as a palace stood on this site as early as the mid-17th century.

Namiestnikowski Palace was home to several prominent families, among them the Koniecpolskis, the Lubomirskis and, from 1685, the Radziwiłłs. From them the government of the Kingdom of Poland bought the palace in 1818 as the residence of the governor-general of the tsarist government. Among the people who lived here were General Józef Zajączek, viceroy of Tsar Alexander, and the much-hated General Iwan Paskiewicz. The wife of General Zajączek was a very colourful figure; she was a prima ballerina and shocked the town with her love affairs late into old age.

The palace escaped serious damage during World War II. After refurbishment, it was designated the seat of the Council of Ministers and witnessed many important political events: the signing of the Warsaw Pact in 1955, the treaty normalizing relations with Germany in 1970, and the Round Table Talks in 1989. Since 1994 the palace has been the residence of the president of the Republic of Poland.

The Baroque Church of Our Lady of the Assumption (Kościół Wniebowzięcia NMP) was built for the order of Disalced Carmelites in 1661–82, probably to a design by Józef Szymon Bellotti, although the Neo-Classical façade is considerably later. Designed by Efraim Schroeger, it dates from 1782 and is one of the earliest examples of Neo-Classicism in Poland. Despite suffering

The Order of the Visitation was brought to Poland by Maria Gonzaga, wife of Jan Kazimierz. Work on the Church of the Visitation (Kościół Wizytek) began in the same year but was interrupted, and not resumed until the 18th century, when the architect Karol Bay took control of the project. The façade, by Efraim Schroeger, was completed in 1763. The church suffered no war damage, so its interior features have survived intact. The most splendid of these are the Rococo pulpit in the form of a ship and the sculptures on the high altar. Many fine paintings have also survived, including The Visitation by Tadeusz Kuntze-Konicz, St Luitis Gonzaga by Daniel Szulc and St Francis of Sales by Szymon Czechowicz. The ebony tabernacle, decorated with silver plaques by Herman Pothoff, was commissioned by Ludwika Maria and completed in 1654. Next to the church, the Baroque convent building and garden are still used by the Nuns of the Visitation today.

The nucleus of the University of Warsaw (Uniwersytet Warszawski) grew from a summer palace known as the Villa Regia. In the first half of the 17th century, the palace belonged to the Vasa dynasty. From then on it underwent many phases of refurbishment, and in 1816 was chosen to house what was then the new university. After further alteration, the former palace acquired the late Neo-Classical appearance that it has today – as did the outbuildings to each side (designed by Jakub Kubicki in 1814–16), the main school (Corrazi, commenced 1841), and the lecture hall and the former Fine Arts Department (both by Michał Kado, 1818–22). After the January Insurrection – when the university was run by the Russian authorities – a library was added (Stefan Szyller and Antoni Jabłoński, 1891–4). The Auditorium Maximum was built when the university passed back into Polish hands after the country regained its independence.

Today, the University of Warsaw is the largest educational establishment in Poland. The complex around Kazimierz Palace (Pałac Kazimierzowski), which houses several buildings, is now mainly used as its administrative centre.

The original Church of the Holy Cross (Kościół św Krzyża, 1626) was destroyed during the Swedish Deluge of the 1650s. The current Baroque missionaries' church was designed by Giuseppe Simone Bellotti and built between 1679 and 1696. The façade was completed in 1760.

The church is a splendid example of Varsovian church architecture of the late 17th century. During World War II, it suffered major damage and most of its interior was destroyed. The most interesting surviving feature is the altar in the south wing of the transept, designed by Tylman van Gameren. Many important ceremonies have taken place in the church, including the funerals of political thinker Stanisław Staszic (1755–1826), composer Karol Szymanowski (1882–1937) and painter Leon Wyczółkowski (1852–1936). Urns containing the hearts of composer Frédéric Chopin (1810–49) and novelist Władysław Reymont (1867–1925) are built into a pillar of the nave.

Contrary to what its name suggests, Staszic Palace (Pałac Staszica) never belonged to Stanisław Staszic, nor did he ever live here – although he did fund it. The palace was built by Antonio Corazzi between 1820 and 1823 in the late Neo-Classical style, as the headquarters of the Royal Society of Friends of Science. Since World War II it has housed the Polish Academy of Science and the Warsaw Scientific Society. The monument to astronomer Nicolaus Copernicus that stands in front of the building is by Bertel Thorvaldsen. It was unveiled in 1830.

Built after 1681, Gniński-Ostrogski Palace (Pałac Gnińskich-Ostrogskich) is one of Tylman van Gameren's grand masterpieces. The pavilion was erected on an elevated terrace above a cellar. According to legend, a golden duck lived under the palace, guarding its treasures.

Today the palace is home to the Frédéric Chopin Museum (Muzeum Fryderyka Chopina), which houses portraits, letters and autograph manuscripts, as well as the grand piano at which Chopin composed during the last two years of his life. It is also the home of the Chopin Society, and regular performances of Chopin's music take place here.

The street known as Nowy Świat (New World) is a stretch of the medieval route leading from the castle to Czersk and on to Cracow, and thus forms part of the Royal Route. Buildings started to appear along a section of the road at the end of the 18th century. First came a small number of Neo-Classical palaces; by the beginning of the 19th century they had been joined by late Neo-Classical town houses. At the end of the 19th century, Nowy Świat was an elegant street of restaurants, cafés, summer theatres, hotels and shops. After serious damage in World War II, only the Neo-Classical buildings were reconstructed, although later buildings were given pseudo-Neo-Classical features to preserve a uniformity of style.

Today, Nowy Świat is one of the most attractive streets in Warsaw, with wide pedestrian areas and cafés with pavement gardens. Blikle, the café at No. 33, boasts a 130-year tradition and the best doughnuts (paczki) in town. Kossakowski Palace, at No. 19, was remodelled by Henryk Marconi in 1849–51. Strolling along Nowy Świat it is worth turning down Ulica Foksal, where there are a number of 19th-century houses and small palaces. The most beautiful, at Nos. 1/2/4, was built for the Zamoyski family by Leandro Marconi in 1878–9. Today, it houses an up-market art gallery and the Association of Architects of the Polish Republic. At the roundabout on the intersection of Nowy Świat and Aleje Jerozolimskie stands the huge building of the former Polish United Workers' Party Central Committee. Transformed after the fall of communism into a "den of capitalism", it now houses banks, the Polish stock exchange and the offices of various companies.

The Polish Military Museum (Muzeum Wojska Polskiego), established in 1920, contains a collection of Polish arms and armour spanning more than 1,000 years. The most interesting aspect of the permanent exhibition is the collection of armour from the Early Middle Ages to the end of the 18th century. It includes a rare gilded helmet that belonged to a Polish chieftain of the Early Christian era and numerous pieces relating to the greatest medieval battles fought on Polish territory.

Among the more unusual exhibits are medieval jousting armour and an impressive collection of 17th-century armour of the Husaria, the famous Polish cavalry, with eagle wings, leopardskins and a mounted cavalryman in full regalia. Heavy weapons from the two World Wars are displayed in the park outside.

Plac Trzech Krzyży (Three Crosses Square) is something of a misnomer. Mounted on top of Baroque columns, two gilded crosses, commissioned by August II and made by Joachim Daniel Jauch in 1731, mark the beginning of Droga

The oldest buildings around the square are two 18th-century town houses: No. 1 Nowy Świat, with an early Neo-Classical façade, and No. 2 Plac Trzech Krzyży, part of the complex of the Institute of the Deaf and Blind, established in 1817. New buildings recently erected round the square have restored something of its urban character.

The parliamentary tradition in Poland dates from 1453, but it was interrupted by the loss of Polish sovereignty in the late 1700s. Only after the restoration of Poland's independence in 1918 was its two-chamber parliament – comprising the Sejm and the Senate – reconvened. Lacking a suitable building, representatives and senators gathered for a time in the former Institute for the Education of Young Ladies.

In 1925–8, a lofty semi-circular hall was built, with a debating chamber for the Sejm. It was designed by Kazimierz Skórewicz and decorated with Art Deco bas-reliefs by Jan Szczepkowski. After damage suffered in World War II, the parliamentary buildings were significantly extended in the spirit of the comparatively refined Socialist Realist style, to a design by Bohdan Pniewski.

In 1989, after the first free elections since World War II, the upper parliamentary chamber, abolished under communist rule, was restored.

THE CITY CENTRE

From the late 18th to the mid-19th century, the area around Ulica Senatorska and Plac Teatralny was the commercial and cultural centre of Warsaw. Imposing Neo-Classical buildings with impressive colonnades are still to be seen there. The Grand Theatre (Teatr Wielki) on Plac Teatralny is one of the largest buildings of its type in Europe. The Saxon Gardens (Ogród Saski), stretching through the centre of the district, are what remains of a former royal park that adjoined the residence of the Saxon king August II. century, the city's commercial centre moved to the area around Ulica Marszałkowska, prompted by the opening in 1845 of Warsaw's first railway station at the junction with Aleje Jerozolimskie. The city centre was completely transformed after the damage inflicted during World War II. Today, its principal landmark is the Palace of Culture and Science (Pałac Kultury i Nauki). The western part of the city centre is dominated by tower blocks. For tourists, the eastern side is of most interest. Here, several historic buildings have survived, dating from the 18th up to the early 20th century.

GETTING THERE

The major transport routes cross in the city centre. The best way to get around the main streets there is by tram along Ulica Marszałkowska, Ulica Jana Pawła II, Aleje Solidarności and Aleje Jerozolimskie. From Ursynów and Mokotów you can also travel by metro. Buses go almost everywhere.

Ulica Miodowa

Ulica Miodowa lies just outside the much-visited Old Town. Tourists rarely venture here, but it holds many attractions nonetheless. The street has three Baroque churches and several palaces – including the Neo-Classical Primate's Palace and the Rococo Branicki Palace – set behind spacious courtyards. The former Collegium Nobilium, the most famous Polish school for the children of the nobility in the 18th century, now houses the Academy of Dramatic Arts.

The Primate's Palace, a building in the Neo-Classical style

The present-day appearance of the Primate's Palace (Pałac Prymasowski) reflects the refurbishments carried out by Efraim Schroeger in 1777–84 for the Primate of Poland, Antoni Ostrowski. Schroeger's work was then continued by Szymon Zug for the next primate, Michał Poniatowski. The unusual arrangement of the building, with its semicircular wings, is reminiscent of the designs of the most celebrated architect of the Italian Renaissance, Andrea Palladio (1508–80).

The Primate's Palace is generally considered to be the first Neo-Classical palace built in Poland. It was destroyed during World War II, then was rebuilt in 1949–52. Today it is used as an office building.

The superb Great Hall (Sala Wielka) is decorated with Ionic columns and delicate Neo-Classical stuccowork.

Branicki Palace (Pałac Branickich) was built for Jan Klemens Branicki, adviser to August III. This powerful magnate was known both as a distinguished soldier and a connoisseur of fine art. Work began on the palace in 1740, to a design by Jan Zygmunt Deybel, and was completed by Giacomo Fontana.

Following almost complete destruction during World War II, this Rococo palace was rebuilt in 1947–53. The reconstruction was based on detailed historical research and 18th-century paintings.

Capuchin Church ③

ul. Miodowa 13. Map 1 C3. 116, 122, 174, 175, 180, 195, 303.

The Capuchin Church (kościół Kapucynów), or Church of the Transfiguration, was built by Jan III Sobieski in gratitude for the Polish victory over the Turks at the Battle of Vienna in 1683. Building began in the same year under the direction of Izýdor Affaita – probably to designs by Tylman van Gameren and Agostino Locci the Younger – and was completed by Carlo Ceroni in 1692. The modest façade recalls the Capuchin church in Rome. The church houses urns containing the heart of Jan III and the ashes of the Saxon king, August II. In the crypt, there is a nativity scene with emotive figures.

The Baroque Pac Palace (Pałac Paca), formerly the residence of the Radziwiłł family, was designed and built by Tylman van Gameren in 1681–97. One of the palace's 19th-century owners, Ludwik Pac, commissioned the architect Henryk Marconi to redesign it; work was completed in 1828. The interiors were decorated in the Gothic, Renaissance, Greek and Moorish styles, and the façade re-modelled in the Palladian manner. The palace gate was modelled on a triumphal arch and decorated with Classical bas-relief sculptures – the work of Ludwik Kaufman, a pupil of the celebrated Neo-Classical sculptor Antonio Canova. Today the palace houses the Ministry of Health.

Kraśiński Palace (Pałac Kraśińskich), in the Baroque style, is regarded as one of the most beautiful late 17th-century buildings in Warsaw. It was designed by Tylman van Gameren and built between 1687 and 1700 for the mayor of Warsaw, Jan Dobrogost Kraśiński.

A triangular pediment features ornamental reliefs depicting the heroic deeds of the Roman patrician Marcus Valerius (known as Corvinus),

The reliefs are the work of Andreas Schlüter, an outstandingly gifted sculptor and architect who later designed the Arsenal and Royal Castle in Berlin. Rebuilt after war damage, the palace now houses a collection of antique prints and manuscripts from the National Library.

The arsenal was built in 1638–47, in the Baroque style, by Władysław IV Vasa. There, during World War II, boy scout soldiers of the Grey Ranks (the Szare Szeregi, who were actively involved in the resistance movement) released 21 prisoners from the hands of the Gestapo; this brave action is commemorated by a plaque.

The Arsenal now houses the Archaeological Museum, with exhibits from excavations carried out within both the country's pre-war and present day borders. Also on display are objects from other European countries, Asia, the Americas and Africa. The exhibition on prehistoric Poland is highly recommended. By prior arrangement, younger visitors may take clay pots using prehistoric methods.

Before World War II, this Baroque palace was in a narrow shopping street. When the East-West (W-Z) route was constructed (1948–9), it was suddenly surrounded by a major traffic artery. The palace, which has the most beautiful mansard roofs in Warsaw and an oval bow-fronted façade, was built in 1728 to a design by Jan Zygmunt Deybel. Since 1990 it has housed the Independence Museum (Muzeum Niepodległości), which features a collection of documents relating Poland's history.

Today Plac Bankowy (Bank Square) is one of the busiest places in Warsaw. Once a quiet little square, it was radically altered after the construction of the East–West route and Ulica Marszałkowska. A statue of Feliks Dzierżyński, the founder of the Soviet security service, was erected here, and the square was renamed in his honour. In 1989, to the joy of local inhabitants, the statue was removed and the square's original name restored. Plac Bankowy was once the site of the largest synagogue in Warsaw. It was demolished after the collapse of the Ghetto Uprising of 1943. A tower block now stands on the site. The most interesting buildings are on the west side of the square. The group of Neo-Classical buildings zealously rebuilt after World War II were designed by Antonio Corazzi. The most impressive is the three-winged palace of the Commission for Revenues and Treasury, which today serves as a town hall. From the junction with Ulica Elektoralna, the fine building of the former Bank of Poland (Bank Polski) and Stock Exchange (Giełda) can be admired. The building now houses the John Paul II Collection, donated by Janina and Zbigniew Porczyński. It consists of over 450 works by famous artists and is arranged thematically.

Map 1 C4. 111.

Before 1944, Plac Teatralny (Theatre Square) was the heart of Warsaw. The enormous Neo-Classical Grand Theatre (Teatr Wielki) on the south side was designed by Antonio Corazzi and Ludwik Kozubowski and completed in 1833. The façade is decorated with a Neo-Classical frieze by Paweł Maliński depicting Oedipus and his companions returning from the Olympian Games. The theatre was rebuilt and greatly enlarged after suffering war damage. Two statues stand in front of the building: one depicts Stanisław Moniuszko, the father of Polish opera (see p26), and the other Wojciech Bogusławski, who instigated the theatre's construction. Today it is the home of the National Opera and the National Theatre.

In 1848, the Russian composer Mikhail Glinka (1803–57) lived and worked in the house at No. 2 Ulica Niecała, just off Plac Teatralny.

Bogusławski Monument

Opposite the theatre, on the north side of the square, stood the small Church of St Andrew and the enormous, repeatedly extended Jabłonowski Palace, which was refashioned as the town hall in 1817–19. Close by was Blank's Palace, a late Baroque building, which was owned by Piotr Blank, a banker at the time of Stanisław August Poniatowski (1764–95). At the beginning of the Nazi occupation of Poland, the Germans arrested Stefan Starzyński, the heroic mayor of Warsaw, in this building. During the Warsaw Uprising, the poet Krzysztof Kamil Baczyński died amid its ruins. In the years after World War II, only Blank's Palace was rebuilt; Jabłonowski Palace and the church – now the Church of St Brother Albert and St Andrew – were rebuilt only recently. The Nike Monument, which once stood in Plac Teatralny in memory of Warsaw's resistance against the Nazis, was moved to a new site near the East–West route, where it stands on a high plinth.

The Saxon Gardens (Ogród Saski) were laid out between 1713 and 1733 by August II, the Strong, to a design by Jan Krzysztof Naumann and Mateusz Daniel Pöppelmann. Originally the royal gardens adjoining Morsztyn Palace, they became the basis for a Baroque town planning project in Warsaw known as the Saxon Axis (Osia Saska). In 1727 the Saxon Gardens became the first public park in Poland, and for two centuries they served as an alfresco "summer salon" for Varsovians. At the time of August III, Karol Fryderyk Pöppelmann built a Baroque summer theatre here; this stood until 1772. Between 1816 and 1827, James Savage refashioned the gardens in the English style. In 1870 they were graced by an enormous wooden summer theatre, which was destroyed in September 1939, at the start of World War II. The gardens are now adorned with 21 Baroque sandstone statues made by sculptors including Jan Jerzy Płersch in the 1730s. There were once many more statues here; some were removed to St Petersburg by Marshal Suvorov, who recaptured Warsaw during the uprising led by Tadeusz Kościuszko in 1794.

Saski Palace was destroyed at the end of 1944. All that remains today is the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, where the body of a soldier who fell in the defence of Lvov (1918–19) was interred on 2 November 1925. Plans are afoot to restore the palace to its former glory.

The Zachęta building – now the National Gallery of Contemporary Art – was built in 1899–1903 for the Society for the Promotion of Fine Arts.

It was designed by Stefan Szyller, the leading architect of Warsaw's Revival period, a 19th- and early 20th-century architectural movement. It was conceived as a monumental building in the Neo-Renaissance style, with four wings (only completed in 1995) and a glass-roofed inner courtyard.

In order to promote the work of contemporary Polish artists, the Society organized exhibitions and competitions, and purchased works of art. The Zachęta's permanent collections were transferred to the National Museum, and the building, as before, now serves as a venue for temporary exhibitions of modern art.

It was here in 1922 that Gabriel Narutowicz, the first president of the newly independent Polish Republic, was assassinated by Eligiusz Niewiadomski, a Polish painter, critic and fanatic.

The Evangelical Church of the Augsburg Confession (Kościół św Trójcy) was designed by Szymon Bogumił Zug and built in 1777–81. The Neo-Classical building is crowned by a dome 58 m (189 ft) high. For a long time the church was the highest building in Warsaw, and bore witness to the religious tolerance of the Polish nation and of Stanisław August Poniatowski (1764–95), the last king of Poland. The church is reminiscent of the Pantheon in Rome; however, this ancient model was merely a starting point from which Zug developed a unique design. The interior of the church features a vast barrel-vaulted nave with rectangular transepts. The west front features a massive Doric portico which emphasizes the severity of the façade, regarded as one of the outstanding examples of Neo-Classical architecture in Poland. The interior, with its double tier of galleries supported by columns, has excellent acoustics and is used for choral and other concerts.

The Ethnographical Museum (Muzeum Etnograficzne) is housed in a Neo-Renaissance building on the south side of Plac Małachowski. The former head office of the Land Credit Association, it was built in 1854–8, to a design by Henryk Marconi, an Italian architect who settled in Warsaw. It recalls the Libreria Sansoviniana in Venice, and is one of the city's finest 19th-century buildings. The museum contains permanent displays of Polish folk costumes, folklore and arts and crafts, and collections of ethnic and tribal art from around the world, including Africa, Australia, the Pacific and Latin America. It also mounts occasional temporary exhibitions.

In a neighbouring building on Ulica Mazowiecka, behind a gate with bullet marks, is the glass-fronted Artist's House (Dom Artysty), which contains a modern art gallery. Also on Ulica Mazowiecka are several bookshops, the best of which are at the intersection with Ulica Świętokrzyska. Up until the beginning of World War II, Ziemiańska, a very famous café, was to be found at No. 22 Ulica Mazowiecka. This was where the cream of society and the artistic community met to exchange ideas and gossip over coffee.

Queen Juliana of the Netherlands is reputed to have described the Palace of Culture and Science (Pałac Kultury i Nauki) as “modest but tasteful”. This enormous building – a gift for the people of Warsaw from the nations of the USSR – was built in 1952–5 to the design of a Russian architect, Lev Rudniew. At the time, this monument to “the spirit of invention and social progress” was the second tallest building in Europe. It resembles Moscow's Socialist Realist tower blocks, and although it has only 30 storeys, with its spire it is 230 m 68 cm (750 ft) high. Its volume is over 800,000 cubic m (28 million cubic ft) and it contains 40 million bricks. It is said to incorporate many architectural and decorative elements taken from stately homes after World War II. Despite the passage of time, this symbol of Soviet domination still provokes extreme reactions, from admiration to demands for its demolition.

Nożyk Synagogue was founded by Zelman and Ryfka Nożyk. In 1893 they donated the land on which it was to be built. Later they left half of their estate to the Orthodox Jewish community. The synagogue was built between 1898 and 1902. The interior has an impressive portico, crowned by a metal dome bearing the Star of David, which contains the Ark of the Covenant. In the centre of the nave is a raised pulpit known as a bema. The nave is surrounded by galleries that were originally intended for female worshippers.

Today, this is the only active synagogue in Warsaw. When it was built, it was hidden away in the heart of a housing estate, surrounded by high-rise tenement buildings. After the war, few of these were still standing. During the Nazi occupation, the synagogue was closed for worship and the German forces used it as a warehouse. Reopened in 1945, it was eventually (1977–83) restored to its original condition.

Of a total population of no more than 1,300,000, there were about 400,000 Jews in Warsaw before World War II; the city had the second largest Jewish population after that of New York. The northern part of Warsaw, which was inhabited predominantly by Jews, was densely built up, with many tenement blocks. The languages spoken in the area were Yiddish, Hebrew and also Russian, spoken by Jews who had fled Russia.

Those interested in Jewish history and culture should also visit the historic – though somewhat overgrown – cemetery on Ulica Okopowa. The museum of the Jewish Historical Institute (Żydowski Instytut Historyczny), with a library, archives and Judaica museum, is also worth a visit.

Ulica Dzika. It was from here that some 300,000 Jews from the Warsaw Ghetto and elsewhere were loaded onto cattle trucks and dispatched to almost certain death in the extermination camps. Among them was Janusz Korczak and his group of Jewish orphans. Living conditions in the Ghetto were indescribably inhuman, and by 1942 over 100,000 of the inhabitants had died. The monument, on which the architect Hanna Szmalek and the sculptor Władysław Kłamerus collaborated, is made of blocks of black and white marble bearing the names of hundreds of Warsaw's Jews.

Between the Monument to the Heroes of the Ghetto and the Umschlagplatz Monument runs the Trail of Jewish Martyrdom and Struggle, unveiled in 1988. It is marked by 16 blocks of granite bearing inscriptions in Polish, Hebrew and Yiddish and the date 1940–43. The site of a bunker, in which the uprising's commanders blew themselves up has been specially marked. Each block is dedicated to the memory of the 450,000 Jews murdered in the Warsaw Ghetto in the years 1940–43, to the heroes of the Ghetto Uprising in 1943 and to certain key individuals from that time.

The Monument to the Heroes of the Ghetto (Pomnik Bohaterów Getta) was erected in 1948, when the city of Warsaw still lay in ruins. Created by the sculptor Natan Rapaport and the architect Marek Suzin, it symbolizes the heroic defiance of the Ghetto Uprising of 1943, which was planned not as a bid for liberty but as an honourable way to die. It lasted one month.

Reliefs on the monument depict men, women and children struggling to flee the burning ghetto, together with a procession of Jews being driven to death camps under the threat of Nazi bayonets.

In front of this monument, on 7 December 1970, Willy Brandt, Chancellor of West

A new museum dedicated to the history of Polish Jews is in the process of being built near to the monument, within the former ghetto area of the city.

GHETTO UPRISING

The Nazis created the Jewish ghetto on 16 November 1940. The area was carefully isolated with barbed wire fencing, which was later replaced with brick walls. Over 450,000 people were crowded into the ghetto: Jews from Warsaw and other parts of Poland as well as gypsies. In March 1942 the Germans began to liquidate the ghetto, deporting over 300,000 people to the death camp in Treblinka. The Ghetto Uprising, which began on 19 April 1943 and lasted one month, was organized by the secret Jewish Fighting Organization. Following the suppression of the Uprising, the Nazis razed the whole area to the ground.

This emotionally stirring monument, designed by Mirosław Biskupski, has the form of a typical railway wagon in which Poles were deported from the country into the depths of the Soviet Union. Further Afield

There are many places of interest outside the centre of Warsaw. The most important lie along the Royal Route stretching from the Royal Castle in the north to Wilanów in the south, and also on the edges of the escarpment that runs down to the left bank of the River Vistula; here there are several country mansions with extensive parks. Most can be reached by tram or by bus.

The Modernist Church of St Stanisław Kostka (Kościół św. Popiełuszko was a national hero, renowned for his courageous sermons in defence of Poland's freedom. He was eventually murdered in 1984 by communist security agents. His grave is in the church cemetery; it is covered with a stone cross and surrounded by linked rocks arranged in the manner of a rosary. The church itself is distinguished by its openwork twin towers. Inside, there are Baroque paintings by the Silesian artist Michael Willmann.

The castle's layout was spacious – it had an internal cloistered courtyard and four towers – but its splendour was destined to be short-lived; the Swedish army sacked it in 1655 and it later changed hands repeatedly, being rebuilt many times. During World War II, Ujazdowski Castle was destroyed by fire. The ruins were completely removed in 1953 and rebuilding of the castle only began in the 1970s.

The history of Belvedere Palace (Belweder) goes back to the 17th century. Its present appearance, however, dates from 1818, when it was refashioned by Jakub Kubicki for the Russian governor general Prince Constantine (the much hated brother of Tsar Alexander I) and his Polish aristocrat wife. On the night of 29 November 1830, a detachment of cadet officers, together with a number of students, attacked the palace, starting the November Insurrection.

After 1918, Belvedere Palace became the official residence of the presidents of Poland, including Marshal Józef Piłsudski (1867–1935), to whom an exhibition situated in the palace is devoted.

To the south of the palace, built on the site of the now demolished Ujazdowski Church, a terrace was built with a landscaped park at the foot of the escarpment. It was adorned with canals, a pool and several romantic pavilions in Greek, Egyptian and Gothic styles. These grounds are now part of Łazienki Park. This exceptionally beautiful Neo-Classical palace is best seen from the escarpment.

Królikarnia Palace (Palacyk Królikarnia) owes its unusual name (“rabbit hutch”) to the fact that it stands on the site of a rabbit farm and hunting grounds that belonged to August II in the 1700s. It is a square building covered with a dome, recalling Andrea Palladio's masterpiece, the Villa Rotonda, near Vicenza. This exquisite little Neo-Classical palace is set in a garden on the slope of the escarpment in the district of Mokotów. It was designed by Dominik Merlini for Karol de Valery Thomatis, the director of Stanisław August Poniatowski's royal theatres and a man reputed to have amassed a fortune at cards.

Fatum, a sculpture by Xawery Dunikowski in Królikarnia Park

Today the palace houses the Xawery Dunikowski Museum, containing works by this renowned contemporary Polish sculptor.

The Baroque Church of St Anthony (Kościół św Antoniego), built between 1687 and 1693 by the monks of the Bernardine order, was designed by Tylman van Gameren. The church stands on the site of the former village of Czerniaków, which belonged to Stanisław Herakliusz Lubomirski, the Grand Crown Marshal, who was nicknamed Solomon.

The relatively plain façade of this church belies its ornate interior, which includes trompe l'oeil paintings, stucco work and altars by the painter Francesco Antonio Giordano and the renowned sculptor Andreas Schlüter, among others.

The main theme of the paintings is the life of St Anthony of Padua; another person portrayed on the inside of the dome is Antonius Druzus, a legendary Roman ancestor of the Lubomirski lineage.

In a glass coffin under the high altar are the relics of St Boniface of Tarsus, who worked as an administrator for a Roman senator and was martyred in the year 300 AD. These treasured relics were presented to Stanisław Lubomirski by Pope Innocent XI in 1687.

Łazienki Palace ③

Łazienki Park is part of a great complex of heritage gardens. In the 17th century there was a royal menagerie along the foot of the escarpment. In 1674, Grand Crown Marshal Stanisław Herakliusz Lubomirski acquired the park and, engaging the services of Tylman van Gameren, he altered the southern part of the menagerie, building a hermitage and a bathing pavilion on an island. The pavilion gave the park its name (Łazienki meaning "baths"). In the second half of the 18th century, the park was owned by Stanisław August Poniatowski, who commissioned Karol Ludwik Agricola, Karol Schultz and later Jan Christian Schultz to lay it out as a formal garden. Lubomirski's baths were refashioned into a royal residence, Łazienki Palace, or Palace on the Water, which is now a museum.

Peacock

Just as in Stanisław August Poniatowski's time, visitors to Łazienki Park can admire the peacocks and take a boat ride on the lake, which is full of carp.

Old Orangery

In 1774–8, Dominik Merlini created the Stanisławowski Theatre in the Old Orangery. It is one of the few remaining 18th-century court theatres in the world.

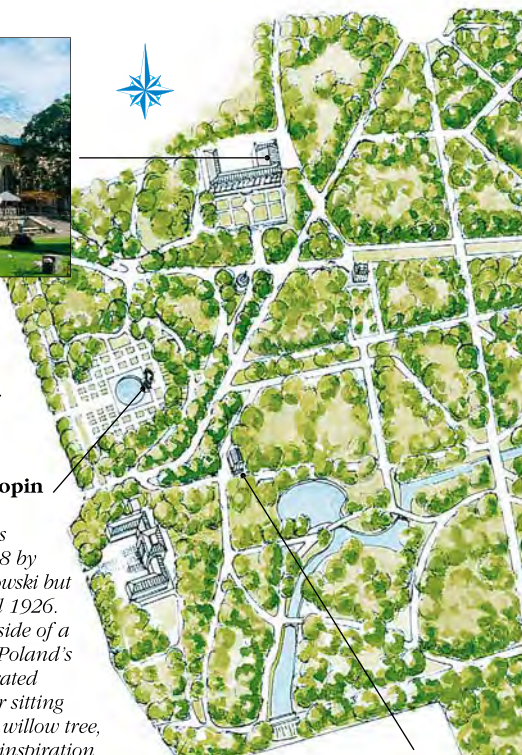

Monument to Chopin

This Secessionist monument was sculpted in 1908 by Wacław Szymanowski but not unveiled until 1926. Positioned at the side of a lake, it depicts Poland's most celebrated composer sitting under a willow tree, seeking inspiration from nature.

Temple of the Sibyl

This Neo-Classical building, based on an ancient Greek temple, dates from the 1820s. It is made of wood.

Wilanów Palace was built at the end of the 17th century as the summer residence of Jan III Sobieski. This illustrious monarch, who valued family life as much as material splendour, commissioned Augustyn Locci to build a modest country house. Later the palace was extended and adorned by renowned architects and artists including Andreas Schlüter and Michelangelo Palloni.

Poland at a Glance

While southern Poland consists of a band of mountains and uplands, Central Poland is a land of endless plains. In the north, a post-glacial landscape dominates, and the Baltic coast, though fairly cool, has beautiful sandy beaches. Its provinces also offer unblemished natural landscapes. The Tatra Mountains, the highest in Poland, are traversed by well-marked footpaths, from which fine views and a pure alpine environment can be enjoyed. For admirers of manmade structures, many historic buildings have survived in regional Poland, despite the country's stormy history.

The Gdańsk Crane (see p237) is one of the largest European cranes dating from the Middle Ages. Restored after war damage, it stands as a symbol of the city's former commercial might.

Many of the attractive sandy beaches (see p259) on the Baltic Sea are backed by cliffs, which are vulnerable to storm damage.

Raczyński Palace (see pp212–13) at Rogalin is one of the most splendid residences in Greater Poland. The late Baroque palace now houses a museum of interiors and a valuable collection of paintings. It is surrounded by a beautiful park with ancient oaks.

The town hall in Wrocław (see p191) is one of the most interesting late Medieval buildings in Central Europe. It is crowned with unusual finials and fine stone sculptures.

The Mazurian Lake District (see pp284–5), known as “The Land of a Thousand Lakes”, is a wilderness, with great forests, extensive woods and marshlands, and brick-built houses, Gothic churches and castles. Its pure character, unspoilt by civilization, is appreciated by storks: more nest here than anywhere else in Europe.

Krasiczyn Castle (see p170), dating from the early 17th century, is defended by sturdy towers. The walls have elaborate parapets.

In Kazimierz Dolny (see p119), under the Renaissance colonnades of the town houses in the market square, paintings are on display and wicker baskets offered for sale. Fortune-telling gypsies mingle among the tourists.

The Cloth Hall in Cracow (see p131), an unusual building in the centre of Main Market Square, once contained market stalls. Today it is filled with shops selling souvenirs and local folk art, and popular cafés. On the first floor there is a splendid gallery of 19th-century Polish art.

MAZOVIA AND THE LUBLIN REGION

In the nostalgic lowland landscape of Mazovia, sandy roads wind through the fields, lines of windswept willows stand in isolation, and meadows stretch to the edge of valleys where swift rivers flow. For centuries, Podlasie was the borderland between the Poles and the eastern Slavonic peoples. The hilly Lublin region has many excellent examples of Renaissance and Baroque architecture.

For centuries, Mazovia was, both culturally and economically, one of the least developed areas of the ethnically Polish lands of the Commonwealth of Two Nations. In the early Middle Ages it was the homeland of the Mazowie tribe. It was united with the state of the Polanie under Prince Mieszko I (963–92). The Principality of Mazovia came into existence in 1138, during the division of Poland, and it preserved its independence for nearly 400 years. Mazovia was incorporated into the Kingdom of Poland in 1526 after the death of the last Mazovian princes, and in 1596, Sigismund III Vasa moved the capital of the Commonwealth of Two Nations from Cracow to Warsaw, in Mazovia.

Mazovia's cultural distinctiveness has been influenced by the presence of a politically active yet conservative petty yeoman-gentry. Even today, in the east of the region and in Podlasie, farmsteads, with humble cottages built in the style of mansions, can be seen.

Apart from Warsaw, the towns of Mazovia have always been modest, and this is evident even today in more recent buildings and modern urban planning.

After the Congress of Vienna (1815), Mazovia and the Lublin region formed part of the Congress Kingdom, under Russian rule. In 1918, the whole area was returned to the reborn Poland.

The Lublin area differs considerably from Mazovia, in both landscape and culture. Its architectural jewel is the delightful town of Kazimierz Dolny, on the banks of the Vistula.

Mazovia – a region famous for its orchards

Exploring Mazovia and the Lublin Region

The Kampinoska Forest (Puszcza Kampinoska), a national park, extends out from the suburbs of Warsaw. There are also large tracts of woodland, with wild animals, in the north and south of Mazovia. The Lublin region has a more diverse landscape. The gorge of the Vistula, around the town of Kazimierz Dolny, is one of the region's most beautiful sights. Rostocze and Zamość, widely described as the "pearl of the Renaissance", are also very picturesque. In Mazovia, the ruins of brick-built castles can be seen, and in both regions there are many country mansions. Żelazowa Wola is Frédéric Chopin's birthplace and nearby Łowicz is a well-known centre of folklore.

GETTING AROUND

Warsaw, the chief city of Mazovia, has regular air links to major cities worldwide and to principal towns in Poland. All the larger towns in both regions have rail links. Travelling by express from Warsaw to Lublin takes a little over two hours. All places recommended in this guidebook are accessible by bus. However, many of the smaller ones are more easily reached by car. Highway E 30 crosses Mazovia from east to west. From Warsaw, take highway E 77 for Radom and highway 17 for Lublin.

This city, beautifully situated on the high Vistula Bluff, is best known today for its large petrochemical plants. Its history, however, goes back many centuries. From 1075, Płock was the seat of the bishopric of Mazovia. Under Władysław I (1079–1102) and his heir Bolesław III Wrymouth (1102–1138), Płock was the capital of Poland and the favoured royal seat. From 1138 to the end of the 15th century, Płock was the place of residence of the Mazovian and Płock princes. In the 12th century, it was an important centre of political and cultural life in Poland.

The buildings of old Płock are relatively modest, although the small Neo-Classical houses, now restored, make a picturesque ensemble. Particularly noteworthy is the Neo-Classical town hall, built in 1824–7 to a design by Jakub Kubicki. Here, on 23 September 1831 during the uprising against Russian rule, the final session of the insurgent Sejm of the Kingdom of Poland was held.

Another notable building is the large Neo-Gothic cathedral (1911–19) of the Mariavite Church of Poland. Also worth seeing are the Baroque church, the Classical toll-gates and the remains of the Gothic city walls.

The most interesting part of Płock is Tum Hill (Wzgórze Tumskie), with its Renaissance Cathedral of Our Lady of Mazovia and castle remains. The cathedral, built in 1531–5 was the first large Renaissance church in Poland. It was raised by Andrzej Krzycki, Bishop of Płock, later Primate of Poland and a noted scholar and poet. Giovanni Cini and Bernadino Zanobi de Gianotis were the architects, with later rebuilding by Gianbattista of Venice. The interior of the cathedral is full of Renaissance and Baroque tombstones. A marble sarcophagus in the Royal Chapel hosts the remains of Władysław I and his son Bolesław III. The grand Neo-Renaissance façade of the cathedral, with its twin towers, was built at the start of the 20th century to a controversial design by Stefan Szyller, who was in charge of the restoration work.

On the edge of the town stand the Gothic ruins of the red-brick Castle of the Mazovian princes, built around 1420–30. After Mazovia was incorporated into the Kingdom of Poland, the widowed Queen Bona often stayed here. Today, the castle accommodates one of the exhibitions of the Museum of the Mazovian Nobility (Muzeum Szlachty Mazowieckiej).

In the town itself is the Gothic Church of the Annunciation, founded in the first half of the 16th century and rebuilt in the 17th, the parish Church of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, dating from the 16th century, and the modest Neo-Gothic town hall, designed by Henryk Marconi in the mid-19th century. The low-rise apartment blocks with gable roofs near the railway station were built during the Nazi occupation. After the fall of Poland in September 1939 and the annexation of northern Mazovia to the Third Reich, the Nazis planned to settle German colonists in many towns here. Except for the castle and parish church, they intended to demolish the whole of Ciechanów and build it anew.

Opinogóra is closely associated with Count Zygmunt Krasieński (1812–59), a leading poet of the Romantic movement. The tiny Neo-Gothic mansion, situated in an extensive landscaped park, was built as a wedding present for him. According to the locals, it was designed by the French architect Eugène Emmanuel Viollet-le-Duc, although art historians attribute it to Henryk Marconi. Today, the mansion houses the Museum of Romanticism (Muzeum Romantyzmu).

The romantic park in which the mansion is set also contains the parish church, with the mausoleum of the Krasieński family where the poet is buried. Noteworthy too is the marble tomb of Count Zygmunt's mother, Maria Krasieńska, by Luigi Pampaloni, dating from 1841.

Of all the small towns in Mazovia, Pułtusk has the most beautiful setting. Its historic centre, located on an island formed by an arm of the River Narwa, has one of the longest market squares in Europe. The town hall, with its Gothic brick tower, houses the small Regional Museum. Of equal interest is the Gothic-Renaissance collegiate church, with barrel vaulting over the nave executed by Gianbattista of Venice in 1551 and 1556.

To the south of the market square rise the walls of the castle of the bishops of Płock. Destroyed and rebuilt a number of times, it incorporates Renaissance, Baroque and Neo-Classical elements. After restoration work in the 1980s the House of the Polish Diaspora (Dom Polonii) was set up here. Visitors can stay in the hotel and enjoy tennis, canoeing, rowing, horse riding and winter sledging parties. The old-time Polish kitchen, which serves home-made fruit and berry liqueurs and home-baked sourdough bread, is recommended. Czerwińsk on the Vistula 5

Road map E3. 1,200.

The church and monastery in Czerwińsk on the Vistula, formerly owned by the Canons Regular and now by the Salesian order, are among the oldest buildings in Mazovia. The monastery was in existence by 1155 and the Romanesque basilica was probably built in the time of Bishop Aleksander of Płock in the mid-12th century. In spite of later Gothic and modern alterations, the main body of the building largely retains its original appearance. The basilica's nave and aisles each end in an apse – a characteristic feature of Romanesque churches. In 1410, the massed armies of Małopolska, Lithuania and Ruthenia gathered around the Gothic bell tower on their march to war against the Teutonic Knights.

A few miles west of Czerwińsk is the poor but nonetheless charming little town of Wyszogród, overlooking the Vistula. In the Middle Ages it had a castle (demolished at the end of the 18th century) and was the seat of a castellany. Evidence of the town's past glory survives in the church and partially preserved former Franciscan friary, founded in 1406 and rebuilt several times in the 17th and 18th centuries. There is also a Baroque parish church dating from 1779–89.

The romantic manor set in a verdant, well-tended park is the birthplace of the composer Frédéric Chopin (1810–49). At the time of his birth, however, it was no more than a thatched outbuilding in which Chopin's parents, Mikołaj and Justyna Tekla, rented a few rooms. In 1930–31, the building was converted into the Chopin Museum (Muzeum – Dom Urodzenia Fryderyka Chopina) and the park around it planted with trees and shrubs donated by horticulturalists from all over Poland. Inside were assembled all kinds of objects associated with the composer. During the German occupation, many of these were looted by the Nazis, the music of Chopin was banned and all pictures and busts of the composer were destroyed. After World War II, the manor was rebuilt, and in 1948 the museum was finally reopened once more to the public.

Concerts of Chopin's music are given in the house and garden, providing visitors with a unique opportunity to hear the music of the most inspired composer of the Romantic period in the atmosphere of an early 19th-century mansion.

Near Żelazowa Wola lies the village of Brochów, on the edge of the Kampinoska Forest (Puszcza Kampinoska). Frédéric Chopin was christened in the fortified Renaissance church here.

The relatively small town of Łowicz, established in the 13th century, was the seat of one of the oldest castellanies in Poland. For several centuries, its castle (which is no longer standing) was the residence of the bishops of Gniezno, primates of Poland. The collegiate church, which was founded in the Middle Ages and rebuilt in the 17th century, contains many notable works of art. It also houses a number of tombs, the most illustrious occupant of which was Primate Jakub Uchański (d. 1581). His tomb's most noteworthy features are a 16th-century alabaster carving by Jan Michałowicz of Urzędów and an early Neo-Classical frame by Ephraim Schroeger, dating from 1782–3.

The magnificent late Baroque high altar was made between 1761 and 1764 by Jan Jerzy Plesch to a design by Schroeger. It is considered by many to be one of the most original altars in Poland. The altar painting, crowned by an aureole and enclosed between the pilasters of a narrow frame, makes a great impression on churchgoers and tourists alike.

Near the collegiate church is the old Piarist church (kościół Pijarów) – the Piarists were a Catholic order. Its late Baroque undulating façade, which dates from around 1729, is extremely eye-catching. The interior of the building has Baroque altars by Jan Jerzy Plesch.

On the other side of Old Market Square, in the buildings of a former monastery and seminary for missionaries, is the Łowicz Regional Museum (Muzeum Ziemi Łowickiej) devoted to the folklore of the Łowicz area. Its exhibits include characteristic Łowicz costumes of the 19th and early 20th centuries, decorative paper cutouts and folk embroidery.

In the former chapel, built in 1689–1701 to designs by Tylman van Gameren and decorated with frescoes by Michelangelo Palloni, objects from the prehistoric Sarmatian culture are on display.

Łowicz comes alive at Corpus Christi, when in honour of this celebration local people dress in colourful traditional costumes to take part in a splendid procession that winds its way through the centre of town.

Not far from Łowicz, on the road to Nieborów, lies Arkadia, a sentimentally romantic landscaped park. Laid out in 1778 by Princess Helena Radziwiłłowa, Arkadia's attractions include a lake with two islands and a number of romantic pavilions fancifully designed on historical or mythological themes by Szymon Bogumił Zug and Henryk Itar.

Among ancient trees stand the Temple of Diana, the High Priest's House, the Margrave's Cottage with Greek arch, the Gothic Cottage, the Grotto of the Sybil and the Aqueduct.

On some of the pavilion walls, fragments of decorative carving and stonework salvaged from the destroyed Renaissance bishops' castle in Łowicz are mounted.

The Baroque palace in Nieborów was built by Tylman van Gameren between 1690 and 1696 for Primate Michał S. Radziejowski, Archbishop of Gniezno. Radziejowski was a noted connoisseur of literature, music, art and architecture, and as such was a client worthy of Tylman. A symmetric garden was also laid out. Around 1766, at the wish of a later owner, Prince Michał K. Ogiński, the building's façade was adorned with a Rococo figure portraying a dancing Bacchus, with a bunch of grapes and a garland on his head. Ogiński is also famous for the construction of a canal, which, via the river system, linked the Black Sea to the Baltic.

Between 1774 and 1945, Nieborów Palace was the property of the aristocratic Radziwiłł family. It is famous for its fine furnishings, which include Antoine Pesne's portrait of the famous beauty Anna Orzełska, who was the natural daughter of August II (1697–1733), and the antique head of Niobe, praised in the poetry of Konstanty Ildefons Gałczyński (1905–53). This Roman head, which was carved in white marble after a Greek original of the 4th century BC, was presented to Princess Helena Radziwiłłowa by Catherine the Great.

In 1941, the Nazis established a labour camp, Treblinka I, and in 1942 a death camp, Treblinka II. Around 800,000 people, mainly Jews brought from liquidated ghettos, were murdered here. Those brought to Treblinka II were taken off the trains and herded, without even being registered, to the gas chambers. Up until March 1943, the victims were buried in mass graves. After March 1943, the graves were dug up and the bodies burned. Thereafter all bodies were burned. In November 1943, Treblinka II was closed and the ground ploughed over and seeded. Today, the Treblinka Museum of Struggle and Martyrdom stands as a reminder of the past.

In 1964, two monuments were erected on the site of the camp. The monument at Treblinka II is large, spreading over 13 ha (30 acres). It gives an impression of "hundreds of thousands of human beings, coming from nowhere, in a spectral pilgrimage, going to their deaths". It is the work of the architect Adam Haupt and the sculptors Franciszek Duszenko and Franciszek Strynkiewicz.

At Liw, 6 km (4 miles) west of Węgrów, are the remains of a Gothic castle erected in the 15th century. The castle was surrounded by marshes, and the gates could be reached only by a causeway. It was twice stormed by Swedes in the 17th century. In 1782, a small house was erected on the rubble for the county chancellery. Today it houses a Museum of Arms (Muzeum Zbrojownia), which besides a display of weaponry contains portraits by the 18th-century Sarmatian School.

The spectacular ruins of the princely castle tower over the Vistula. The road to the fortress crosses a bridge over the moat. Here, three high towers still stand. This comparatively large town was at one time best known for its arms industry, but today it is more readily associated with the workers' protests of 1976, which took place four years before the founding of Solidarity. Although Radom was rebuilt in the 19th century, several of its older buildings can still be viewed. Nothing, however, remains of the old town itself, which until 1819 was surrounded by a wall.

The most interesting feature of Radom is the Gothic parish church in Ulica Rwańska, which was built in 1360–70 and later remodelled. Two Baroque buildings – Esterka and Gaska – at Nos. 4 and 5 Rynek – house the Gallery of Contemporary Art; beside them stands the arcaded town hall, by Henryk Marconi. Although the castle of the bishops of Cracow has been in ruins since the beginning of the 19th century, its tower still dominates the town. It was built in the 14th century by Bishop Jan Grot. Later owners transformed it into an elegant Renaissance residence. In 1637, Władysław IV came here in disguise. Hiding in the crowd, he wanted to get a secret look at the bride he had married by proxy, Cecilia Renata, daughter of Leopold II of Austria. Dazzled by her beauty, he quickly made his presence known. Unfortunately, the marriage did not prove a happy one.

A Tour around Kazimierz Dolny

The environs of Kazimierz Dolny are renowned for their picturesque landscapes and rich heritage of historic buildings. Here the Vistula valley is cut by deep ravines, while from the gentle hills magnificent views unfold. It is tempting to linger in Nałęczów, with its popular spa, and in Puławy, where Czartoryski Palace stands in a landscaped park. The journey from Kazimierz Dolny to Janowiec can only be made by ferry; this provides an excellent opportunity for photographing both banks of the Vistula.

Gołab ⑥

The Mannerist-Baroque church, which dates from 1628–36, has brick walls and fantastic decoration; beside it stands the Lorentine Chapel.

Sieczehów ⑦

The late Baroque Church of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin towers over the buildings of the former Benedictine abbey. It was built between 1739 and 1769, though the walls contain Romanesque remains. The interior is adorned with paintings by Szymon Mankowski in the Rococo-Neo-Classical style.

Czarnolas ⑧

This was the home of Jan Kochanowski (1530–84), the greatest poet of the Polish Renaissance. Little is left of his wooden manor, and the museum devoted to the poet's life and work is housed in the 19th-century mansion.

Janowiec ①

The extensive ruins of the castle that was built for the Firlej family in the 16th century now house a museum. It includes a small skansen where several wooden buildings, including an 18th-century manor and storehouse, have been re-erected.

Puławy ⑤

The former residence of the Czartoryski family is set in a large landscaped park, now sadly neglected. Many small ornamental buildings, such as the Temple of the Sybil and the Gothic House, are to be seen here.

Nałęczów ③

This health resort also has a spa park, with a pump room, baths and Baroque palace. The wooden cottage housing the museum of the novelist Stefan Żeromski (1864–1925) is open to visitors.

Kazimierz Dolny ②

During the summer, Kazimierz Dolny swarms with tourists. It is a popular weekend destination for Varsovians. The town is well provided with guesthouses, good restaurants and cafés. There are also handicraft stalls and young artists offering their work for sale.

CZARTORYSKI PALACE AT PUŁAWY

After the fall of the Commonwealth at the end of the 18th century, the Puławy residence of Princess Izabella and her husband became an important centre of artistic and political life. In the garden pavilions, the princess established the first Polish national museum, called the Shrine of Memory.

After the November Insurrection of 1831 failed, Puławy was deserted. The Czartoryskis went into exile abroad and their property was confiscated by the Russians.

This delightful little town, the favourite holiday resort of poets and painters, was probably founded by Kazimierz the Great. In the 16th and 17th centuries, it grew rich from the grain trade. The ruins of a Gothic castle with a high tower dominate the town. At its foot can be seen the Renaissance Parish Church of Saints John the Baptist and Bartholomew built in 1610–13, which incorporates the walls of an earlier Gothic church. The interior has provincial stucco work decoration in the vaulting and early Baroque chapels.

The most attractive part of town is the market square, flanked by several Mannerist houses, with rich ornamental coverings. Particularly attractive are the House of Mikołaj Przybyła and House of Krzysztof Przybyła, at Nos. 12 and 13, dating from around 1615. There are also some 16th-century houses in Ulica Senatorska, which leads down to the Vistula, including the Celej House, which dates from around 1635. While strolling through the town, note the former synagogue, dating from the 18th century, the granaries on the banks of the Vistula, and the pre-war villas.

Lublin, the largest city in southeastern Poland, is well-endowed with historic buildings. It is also an important centre of academic life; its best-known seat of learning is the Catholic University of Lublin. Before World War II, the only Jewish college of higher education in Poland was located here. In 1944, after Lublin had been liberated from the Nazis, Poland's first communist government, convened at Stalin's behest, arrived here on the tanks of the Red Army.

Exploring Lublin

The most attractive district of Lublin is the Old Town (Stare Miasto), situated on the edge of the escarpment. It is reached through Cracow Gate (Brama Krakowska), which has become a symbol of the city. This old part of Lublin is a maze of romantic lanes and alleys. The façades of the houses are decorated with Mannerist and Baroque ornamentation and have splendid attics. Many of the buildings have Socialist Realist paintings dating from 1954, when the whole town was renovated to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the establishment of the communist Lublin Committee (see p51).

Cracow Gate, one of Lublin's symbols

At the centre of the Old Town is the Market Square, with Lublin's town hall. Here, the Crown Tribunal of the Kingdom of Poland once had its seat. In the 18th century, the town hall was rebuilt by Dominik Merlini in the Neo-Classical style. Today it houses the Museum of the History of the Town Hall and Crown Tribunal of the Kingdom of Poland. The most magnificent place of worship in the Old Town is the Dominican church (kościół Dominikanów), founded in 1342 and rebuilt in the 17th and 18th centuries. The finest of its 11 chapels is the mid-17th-century Mannerist-Baroque Firlej Chapel. Its ribbed dome is an ambitious confection ascribed to the mason Jan Wolff. The main street in Lublin, Krakowskie Przedmieście, is now a pedestrian precinct lined with elegant shops. In Plac Unii Lubelskiej are the Capuchin church (kościół Kapucynów) and the Church of Our Lady Victorious (Kościół Matki Boskiej Zwycięskiej), founded by Władysław Jagiełło (1386–1434) to commemorate his victory over the Teutonic Knights at the Battle of Grunwald in 1410 (see pp40–41).

The Jewish cemetery adjoining Ulica Kalinowszczyzna, established in 1555, is evidence of the Jewish community that existed in Lublin for many centuries, celebrated in the novels of Nobel laureate Isaac Bashevis Singer (1904–91).

 Lublin's most important historic building is the Chapel of the Holy Trinity (Kaplica Świętej Trójcy). It forms part of Lublin Castle, which was built in the 14th century and remodelled in the Gothic style in 1823–6 for use as a prison. The interior of this Catholic chapel (see p40) is covered with Byzantine frescoes painted in 1418 by Orthodox artists. Among the saints and angels is a portrait of Władysław Jagiełło, the chapel's founder. The chapel is evidence of the cultural diversity of the Kingdom of Poland and the coexistence at this time of the Roman Catholic and Orthodox faiths.

The attentive visitor will notice graffiti left by vandals in the 16th century. In the museum laid out in the rest of the castle are exhibitions of Polish and foreign paintings, folk art and weaponry.

Road map F4. 800.

The magnificent palace at Kozłówka is one of the best-preserved aristocratic residences in Poland. Built between 1735 and 1742 in the Baroque style by Giuseppe Fontana, its first owner was Michał Bieliński, Palatine of Chełm, who at the wish of August II was married – albeit briefly – to one Aurora Rutkowska, who happened to be the king's illegitimate daughter by a Turkish lady named Fatima.

Kozłówka Palace later passed to the famous Zamoyski family, and was rebuilt in the Empire style and renamed Zamoyski Palace. In 1903, Konstanty Zamoyski established what in property law is called an “entail”, in order to ensure that the palace would remain the undivided inheritance of the Zamoyski family.

Zamoyski was regarded by contemporaries as a “handsome man, outstanding for his good companionship and sense of humour”. He was a great collector, a lover of music and a connoisseur of painting. He was educated in the France of Louis-Napoleon, and the style of the Second Empire is clearly visible in the rich décor of the palace interior, with its Neo-Rococo stuccowork, enormous ceramic stoves, chimneypieces in coloured marble, huge chandeliers, lambrequins, curtains, and furniture decorated with inlays and bronze – mainly excellent copies in Louis XV and Louis XVI style from the best French workshops.

Today, the palace is a museum. Its entire contents have been preserved, making it Poland's finest collection not only of 19th-century art but also of everyday objects. (Do not miss the early 20th-century bathroom, which is most elegantly equipped, or the palace kitchens.)

Most impressive of all the exhibits is the collection of some 1,000 paintings, which almost completely cover the walls. These are not original works but high-quality copies of the masterpieces of European painting – the largest collection in Poland of its kind.

The palace chapel – which was modelled on the Royal Chapel at Versailles – was built between 1904 and 1909 by Jan Heurich junior, the pioneer of modern architecture in Poland. It contains a copy by Lorenzo Bartolini of the tomb of Zofia Zamoyska in the Church of Santa Croce in Florence.

An annex of Kozłówka Palace is occupied by a unique gallery housing Socialist Realist art. The building is surrounded by a park that extends over 190,000 sq m (47 acres).

SOCIALIST REALIST ART, KOZŁÓWKA

Socialist Realism was a doctrinal art style that was developed in the Soviet Union in the Stalinist era. In Poland, it was current after World War II, from about 1949 to 1955. Its theoretical principles were unclear, and in practice what counted were the instructions given to the artists. The heroes of Socialist Realist works were party apparatchiks, buxom peasant women and muscular workers. A great number of such works, which were often to be seen on the roofs of public buildings and museum storehouses, can be seen in Kozłówka, where the largest collection in Poland of Socialist Realist art has been assembled.

In its splendour, Potocki Palace rivals Branicki Palace in Białystok, the “Versailles of Podlasie” (see p290). It was built for the ambitious Eustachy Potocki, who later became a general in the Lithuanian artillery. The palace was to be dazzling. It was reconstructed in 1750–58, in the Rococo style, by Giacomo Fontana and his talented team of artists. The painted decoration is by Jan Bogumił Pleresch and the carving by Michał Dollinger and Chrystian Redler. The appearance of the palace, like the career of its owner, was calculated to have a great effect. With its elongated wings, it was different not only in form but also in character. Viewed from the courtyard, the unusual monumental wing, with its imposing gate-tower (visible even from the town), looks almost like a single-storey outbuilding. Similarly, the main block of the palace, which looks modest from the courtyard, overwhelms with its richness when viewed from the garden.

Dynamic Rococo carvings decorate the palace and adjacent orangery. The most interesting are the four groups of Hercules and the Lion, the Hydra, the Minotaur, and the Dragon.

The most interesting aspect of Chełm is its network of underground tunnels, the remains of chalk mines (Podziemia). The tunnels are on three levels and descend to a depth of 30 m (100 ft); visitors may walk along them, candle in hand. In the 17th century, as many as 80 houses had an entrance to the workings. Mining ended in the 1800s. Above ground, the town's most impressive building is the Piarist church. It was built by Paolo Fontana in 1753–63 and has an undulant façade, elliptic nave and imposing dome. The Baroque interior is decorated with paintings by Joseph Mayer.

Interior of the Piarist church in Chełm

The best view of Chełm is from Castle Hill (Góra Zamkowa), where remains of a 13th-century princely castle can be seen. From here, the towers of Roman Catholic churches, the onion domes of a Greek Catholic and an Orthodox church, and a fine Baroque synagogue can be made out. A Jewish community, one of the earliest in Poland, settled here in the 12th century.

Detail from building, Zamość

Zamość is one of the best-preserved Renaissance towns in Europe. It was one of the first to be planned and built from scratch according to Italian concepts of the ideal town. The moving force behind this project was Jan Zamoyski (1541–1605), chancellor and commander-in-chief of the Crown, one of the most powerful and enlightened magnates of Poland's Golden Age, and the owner of Zamość. Bernardo Morando was the architect and work began in 1581, continuing for more than ten years. A programme of restoration was carried out in the 1970s, and in 1992 UNESCO declared the town a World Heritage Site. Today, theatrical performances and many other cultural events take place in the Main Square.

★ Town Hall

With its fine ornamental tower and imposing fan staircase, the Town Hall is the focal point of Zamość.

★ Cathedral

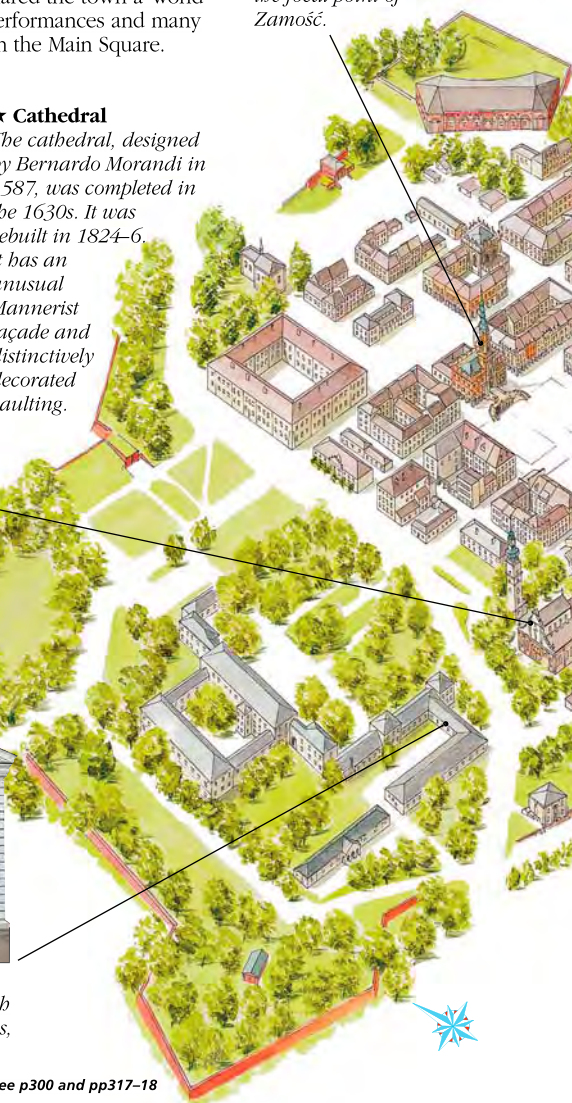

The cathedral, designed by Bernardo Morandi in 1587, was completed in the 1630s. It was rebuilt in 1824–6. It has an unusual Mannerist façade and distinctively decorated vaulting.

Arsenal

The Arsenal, closely connected with the town's formidable fortifications, is today the Polish Army Museum.

CRACOW

Cracow is one of the most beautiful cities in Europe. Over the centuries, many important artists and architects came to work here, among them Veit Stoss from Germany, Bartolomeo Berrecci and Giovanni Maria Padovano from Italy, and Tylman van Gameren from Holland. Cracow has been spared major destruction, so it preserves the largest assemblage of historic buildings and monuments in Poland.

The earliest mention of Cracow in the historical records dates from the middle of the 10th century; it had certainly been incorporated into the Kingdom of Poland before 992. In 1000 it became a see, and around 1038 it assumed the importance of a capital. Wawel Hill became the seat of government, and from 1257, when Bolesław the Chaste gave the city a new municipal charter, it began to spread and flourish at the foot of the hill. In 1364 the Cracow Academy was founded, increasing the city's importance on the European stage. During the 14th and 15th centuries, large sums of money were spent on the development of the city, as can be seen from the numerous Gothic churches and secular buildings that survive to this day.

At the beginning of the 16th century, Cracow came under the influence of the Renaissance. The Wawel Royal Castle, the Cloth Hall in the Main Market Square, and many private houses and mansions in the city were rebuilt in the Renaissance style. Cracow gradually lost its significance, and in 1596 the capital was moved to Warsaw, but it was in Wawel Cathedral that successive kings of Poland were crowned and entombed, and the city continued to acquire many magnificent buildings. Under the Partition of Poland (see pp46–9), Cracow came under Austrian rule, which nevertheless permitted a relatively large degree of local autonomy. Hence it began to assume the role of the spiritual capital of all Poles, both in their native country and abroad. Cracow escaped significant damage during the two World Wars, and in 1978 UNESCO declared it a World Heritage site.

Exploring Cracow

As most places of interest in Cracow are located in its fairly compact historic centre, the city is best seen on foot. A good place to start is Wawel Hill (Wzgórze Wawelskie), with its imposing Wawel Royal Castle and Gothic cathedral, in the crypt of which many kings of Poland are interred. North of Wawel Hill lies the old city of Cracow with its attractive market, the Church of St Mary, the picturesque Cloth Hall and many interesting old houses. To the south of Wawel Hill is the Kazimierz district, with its preserved Jewish quarter. Outlying parts of the city are served by an extensive bus and tram network.

GETTING AROUND

Cracow has an international airport and is an important point on the railway network. By car, it can be reached by motorway from Katowice or rapid transit route from Warsaw.

Main Market Square

This huge market square (Rynek Główny) was laid out when Cracow received its new municipal charter in 1257. One of the largest in Europe, it seethes with life all year round. In summer, pedestrians find themselves negotiating the maze of café tables that fill the square, along with a host of shops, antique dealers, restaurants, bars and clubs. There are also many interesting museums, galleries and historic sights, including some splendid Renaissance and Baroque houses and mansions.

Set in the centre of the Main Market Square, the Cloth Hall (Sukiennice) replaces an earlier Gothic trade hall dating from the second half of the 14th century. Destroyed in a fire then rebuilt by Giovanni Maria Padovano, it owes something of its present appearance to Tomasz Pryliński's Romantic-style restoration (1875–9). Today, the ground floor is filled with a selection of cafés and souvenir shops; while on the upper floor is the Gallery of Polish Painting, with a collection of 19th-century paintings by, among others, Marcello Bacciarelli, Piotr Michałowski, Jan Matejko and Jacek Malczewski.

The origins of the Dominican Church (kościół Dominikanów) go back to the second half of the 13th century. Rebuilt a number of times, by the middle of the 1400s it had become the magnificent Gothic building that still stands today. A number of mortuary chapels were also added; many of them are major works of Renaissance and Baroque art in their own right, with rich decorations and furnishings. Of particular note are the Baroque chapel of the Zbaraski family, at the west end of the north aisle, and the Mannerist chapel of the Myszkowski family, in the first bay of the south aisle. The church was badly damaged by a great fire that swept through the city in 1850, destroying most of its wooden furnishings, although it was promptly restored.

Shrine of St Jack in the Dominican church

Church of St Mary ③

The imposing Church of St Mary (Kościół Mariacki) was built by the citizens of Cracow to rival the Royal Cathedral on Wawel Hill. Building began in 1355, but work on the vaulting and the chapels continued until the mid-15th century, and the lower tower was not completed until the early 16th. At this time, sermons were preached in German. This great basilica, with its rows of side chapels, contains an exceptional number of important works of art.

★ Crucifix

The large sandstone crucifix by Veit Stoss is a fine example of 15th-century sculpture.

Hejnal Tower

The famous trumpet call – the Hejnal – is sounded hourly from the tower. The call is unfinished, in memory of a medieval trumpeter, shot while sounding the alarm. The Hejnal is broadcast live by Polish radio daily at noon.

The Medical Society Building (Gmach Towarzystwa Lekarskiego) was designed by Władysław Kaczmarski and Józef Sowiński and built in 1904. It would hardly merit mention were it not for its interior décor, the creation of Stanisław Wyspiański, one of the most talented artists of the Young Poland movement. He was responsible for the interior decoration of individual rooms and furnishings inspired by folk art, as in the magnificent stained-glass window Apollo and The Solar System.

This typical Cracovian square was laid out at the end of the 19th century. The Church of St Florian (Kościół św. Floriana), on the corner of Ulica Warszawska, is considerably older. Its present appearance is the result of frequent rebuilding – in particular a Neo-Baroque reconstruction in the early years of the 20th century. The original church on this site was built in the early 13th century. At the end of the 19th century, huge monumental public buildings and splendid private houses were erected around the square. The Academy of Fine Arts, at No. 13, designed by Maciej Moraczewski and built between 1879 and 1880, is particularly impressive.

The Grunwald Monument in the centre of the square was unveiled in 1910 to mark the 500th anniversary of the Battle of Grunwald (see p41), in which the armies of the Teutonic Knights were routed. The huge sculpture of Władysław Jagiełło is by Antoni Wiwulski.

The Barbican (Barbakan) is one of the remaining elements of Cracow's medieval fortifications. The double ring of walls that once surrounded the city was built in stages from 1285 to the beginning of the 15th century. Most of the circumvallation was pulled down in the 19th century. The Barbican was built in 1498–9, when the city's defences were strengthened in response to advances in military tactics and equipment. It protected the Florian Gate, to which it was connected by an underground passage. The latter's route is indicated by a change in the colour of the paving stones.

A little further on, at No. 45, is Jama Michalika, a café that was extremely fashionable in the late 19th to early 20th centuries. The fine Art Nouveau décor by Karol Frycz can still be seen.

At No. 1, the Old Theatre (Teatr Stary) is the oldest theatrical building in Poland. It opened in 1798 and has since been rebuilt twice – most recently between 1903 and 1905, when it was remodelled by Franciszek Mączyński and Tadeusz Stryjeński in the Art Nouveau style. The frieze on the façade is by Józef Gardecki.

Exhibitions are regularly held at the Fine Arts Society Building (Pałac Sztuki) at No. 4. Built by Franciszek Mączyński in 1901, this too is in the Art Nouveau style. Interesting exhibitions of contemporary art are also on display for viewing at The Bunker (Bunkier), a Brutalist building erected in the 1960s, located at No. 3a.

In the narrow Ulica św. Anny, it is impossible to miss the imposing Baroque façade of the twin-towered Church of St Anne (Kościół św Anny). The architect was Tylman van Gameren. In designing the façade, he took into account the fact that any view of it would be acutely foreshortened by virtue of the narrowness of the street.

The church building was erected between 1689 and 1703, although work on the decoration was not completed until much later.

The interior has murals by Karol and Innocenti Monti and a fine high altar by Baldassare Fontana. The painting of St Anne that adorns it is by Jerzy Eleuter Siemigonowski.

Also notable are the Baroque choir stalls, decorated by Szymon Czechowicz, and the pulpit, which was carved by Antoni Frączkiewicz.

In the south transept is the shrine and reliquary of St John of Cantinus, a 15th-century theologian and the patron of St Anne's. The church was built after the saint's beatification.

The Collegium Maius is the oldest surviving college of the Jagiellonian University, which grew from the Cracow Academy established by Kazimierz the Great in 1364. Queen Jadwiga, wife of Władysław Jagiełło, bequeathed her personal fortune to the Academy in 1399. In the second half of the 15th century the Collegium Maius acquired new premises, which incorporated the walls of several older buildings. Its present appearance is largely due to a 19th-century restoration in a Romantic style, although the building's Gothic structure survives. Copernicus (see p273) undoubtedly walked in the cloistered courtyard when he was a student here. In the Jagiellonian University Museum are numerous exhibits documenting the rich history of the university.

The enormous edifice that dominates this part of the city is the main building of Cracow's National Museum. Building began in the 1930s but was not finished until 1989.

The exhibits are divided into three main sections. The first is devoted to the applied arts. The second comprises an interesting collection of militaria and objects of historical interest, such as the military jacket of Józef Piłsudski (see p51). The third has an important collection of 20th-century painting and sculpture. The work of the artists of the Young Poland movement is particularly well represented. The display also features pieces by schools that were active in the interwar years, and some fine examples of the art of the postwar period.

Take a walk down Ulica Retoryka and it is impossible to miss the remarkable houses that were designed and built here by Teodor Talowski (1857–1910) in the late 19th century. The architect had an exuberant imagination and a lively sense of humour; the houses that he designed are in an unusual mixture of the Neo-Gothic and Neo-Mannerist styles. They have startling ornamentation, sometimes artificially damaged so as to bestow a patina of age.

At No. 1, for example, is the house "At the Sign of the Singing Frog". Close by is the house "At the Sign of the Donkey", with a motto in Latin that translates as "Every man is master of his own fate". The architect gave to his own house the motto "Festina lente", or "Make haste slowly".

centuries, although rebuilding in the 17th and 19th centuries has considerably altered its appearance. The church, however, is renowned more for its interior decoration than for its architecture and attracts many visitors from all over the world.

A number of interesting features from different ages have been preserved, although the most notable are the Art Nouveau murals and stained-glass windows by Stanisław Wyspiański, dating from around 1900.

The chancel and transept are decorated with a vertiginous scheme featuring entwined flowers, heraldic motifs and religious scenes. The stained-glass windows are monumental compositions of great expressive power and represent one of the highest achievements of the Secessionist stained-glass movement.

Particularly noteworthy is Let there be Light (see p49), which shows the figure of God the Father creating the world.

The cloisters are lined with murals that include the Gallery of Cracovian Bishops, in which the finest portrait is that of Bishop Piotr Tomicki, painted by Stanisław Samostrzelnik some time before 1535.

The Church of Saints Peter and Paul (Kościół św św Piotra i Pawła) is one of the most beautiful early Baroque churches in Poland. It was built for the Jesuits soon after their arrival in Cracow.

Work began in 1596, but after a structural disaster in 1605, the church was almost completely rebuilt to the design of an architect who remains unknown to this day.

The church is enclosed by railings topped with the twelve figures of the apostles dating from 1715–22. The interior of the building contains fine stuccowork by Giovanni Battista Falconi and rich Baroque furnishings. The high altar and the organ screen, designed by Kacper Bażanka, are particularly noteworthy.

Among the many funerary monuments there is none more striking than the black and white marble tomb of Bishop Andrzej Tomicki, dating from 1695–6.

Ulica Kanonicza is named after the canons of the Cracow Chapterhouse, who once had their houses here. Most of the houses were established in the Middle Ages, but in the course of later rebuilding they were embellished with Renaissance, Baroque and Neo-Classical elements. They constitute one of the most important groups of historical buildings in Cracow today.

The finest of these houses is considered to be the Deanery, at No. 21. Its present form dates from the 1580s – a rebuilding project probably undertaken by the Italian architect Santi Gucci that preserved the arcaded courtyard and the mysterious decoration of the façade.

During the 1960s, Karol Wojtyła – later Pope John Paul II – lived in this house. The adjacent house at No. 19, with a modest Neo-Classical façade, contains the Arch- diocesan Museum, which has many valuable religious artifacts and a reconstruction of the room at No. 21 where the future pontiff lived.

The house at No. 15 also dates from the 14th century, although its present form is a result of rebuilding during the Renaissance era. The house is the headquarters of the Ukrainian Art Gallery, and an interesting collection of icons from disused Greek-Catholic and Orthodox churches in southeastern Poland can be seen here.

A visit to Cricoteka, at No. 5, is a different kind of artistic experience. Cricoteka was the home of the famous avant-garde theatre group Cricot 2, founded by Tadeusz Kantor (1915–90) in 1956. A painter, stage-set designer and producer of “happenings”, Kantor was an extremely versatile artist, and the shows he staged at Cricoteka – for example, Wielopole, Wielopole and The Dead Class – brought him universal renown. His company continued his work after his death. The Gothic house contains no stage – just archives and documents that relate the history of the theatrical company.

The Wawel

On the Wawel, the Vistulians built a citadel. It was replaced by a series of buildings, including the Renaissance castle and Gothic cathedral that stand there today. Once the site of coronations and royal burials, the Royal Cathedral is regarded by Poles as a spiritual shrine. The Wawel Royal Castle beside it, once the hub of cultural and political life in Poland, is a symbol of national identity.

 Wawel. 8, 10, 18, 36, 38, 40.

The Wawel was fortified from early times. Of the oldest Gothic fortifications only fragments remain, but three towers raised in the second half of the 15th century survive; they are known today as the Senatorial Tower, the Sandomierz Tower and the Thieves' Tower. Of the fortifications dating from the 16th to 17th centuries the most interesting is the Vasa Gate. Since 1921 it has been crowned with a monument to the 18th-century national hero Tadeusz Kościuszko. The Wawel continued to play a defensive role into the 19th century, and a relatively well-preserved system of fortifications dating from the late 18th to mid-19th centuries can still be seen today.

For anyone who is interested in archaeology, this exhibition is a real delight. The display charts the development of the Wawel over a considerable period of time, and includes a virtual image of the Wawel buildings as they existed in the early Middle Ages, archaeological finds from Wawel hill, and a partially reconstructed early Romanesque chapel dedicated to the Blessed Virgin (Saints Felix and Adauctus).

Built at the turn of the 11th century, the chapel was discovered during research work carried out in 1917.

The Wawel Royal Castle 25

Head in the Audience Hall

One of the most magnificent Renaissance residences in Central Europe, the Wawel Royal Castle was built for Zygmunt I, the penultimate ruler of the Jagiellonian dynasty. The four-winged palace, built in 1502–36 but incorporating the walls of a 14th-century building that stood on the site, was designed and constructed by the Italian architects Francisco Fiorentino and Bartolomeo Berrecci.

After the royal court was transferred from Cracow to Warsaw, the palace fell into neglect, and during the era of the Partitions it served as a barracks. At the beginning of the 20th century the castle was given to the city of Cracow, which started a restoration programme and turned into a museum.

The Royal Armoury has a rich collection of arms and armour.

The Royal Treasury has many precious objects, including this chalice from the abbey at Tyniec.

CASTLE GUIDE

The area open to visitors consists of part of the ground floor of the Royal Castle, where items from the Royal Treasury and Royal Armoury are displayed, as well as the halls on the first and second floors of the east and north wings. The castle's Oriental collection fills the first floor of the west wing.

The Castle Courtyard

A mix of architectural styles can be found at the castle. One of the highlights is the beautiful Renaissance-style courtyard, which was built in the 16th century.

The Cathedral 26

The Cathedral of Saints Stanisław and Waław, which stands on the Wawel in Cracow, is one of the most important churches in Poland. Before the present cathedral was erected (1320–64), two earlier churches stood on the site. The cathedral has many fine features, including a series of chapels founded by rulers and bishops, the most beautiful being the Renaissance Zygmunt Chapel. There are royal tombs in both the cathedral and the Crypt of St Leonard, a remnant of the Romanesque Cathedral of St Waław begun in 1038.

The impressive Baroque Pauline Church on the Rock (Kościół Paulinów na Skałce), with its adjoining monastery complex, was built in 1733–42 by Gerhard Müntzer in collaboration with Antoni Solari. The present church was preceded by two earlier buildings. It was at the foot of the altar of the Romanesque church, the first to be built on the site, that St Stanisław, Bishop of Cracow, was murdered (see pp38–9).

The interior includes Baroque stucco-work by Jan Lehnert. The crypt was converted by Teofil Żebrawski into a pantheon to Polish writers and artists. Among the eminent people who lie here are the painters Jacek Malczewski (1854–1929) and Henryk Siemiradzki, the writers and poets Józef Ignacy Krasiński, Adam Asnyk (1839–97) and Wincenty Pol (1807–72), and the artist and writer Stanisław Wyspiański.

Return along Ulica Skaleczna towards Ulica Augustiańska and take a look at the beautiful Gothic Convent and Church of St Catherine (Kościół św Katarzyny), begun in the mid-14 century. It once belonged to the Augustinian order, but was deconsecrated and used as a warehouse. Of the original features only the high altar remains. The 15th-century Hungarian Chapel (Kaplica Węgierska) next door is connected by a covered bridge over Ulica Skaleczna to the Baroque Augustinian convent.

The Mighty Gothic Church of Corpus Christi was built as the parish church of the new town of Kazimierz, which was founded to the south of the castle by Kazimierz the Great in the 14th century. Work on the church began around 1340, continuing into the early 15th century. The basilica-like interior contains some fine works of art in the Baroque style, including the magnificent high altar of 1634–7 with the painting of The Birth of Christ by Tomasso Dolabella, a fine mid-18th-century pulpit, and stalls dating from 1632, originally built for the monks (although the church has been in the care of canons since the 15th century). Gothic-Renaissance bema in the Old Synagogue

The old Synagogue was built by Matteo Gucci in the mid-16th century in the Renaissance style. It replaced an earlier Gothic synagogue that burned down in 1557. In the Hall of Prayer you will find a reconstructed bema and Ark of the Covenant.

The synagogue houses a branch of the Historical Museum. The displays within consist of some finely crafted artifacts that were used in Jewish rituals, and documents relating to the history of Cracovian Jews and their martyrdom during the Nazi occupation in World War II.

This small and humble prayer house known as the Remuh is one of two Jewish synagogues in Cracow that are still in use. It was built around 1557 by Izrael ben Józef for his son Mojżesz Isserles, a famous scholar, rabbi and reputed miracle worker, known as Remuh. The Renaissance building was later extended, although its basic outline remains as it was. Inside, the Renaissance Ark of the Covenant and the bema, rebuilt as a replica of the original, have survived.

Behind the synagogue is one of the most important Jewish cemeteries in Europe. Despite the damage that the cemetery suffered during World War II, many of the tombstones have survived. Many of the oldest, dating from the late 16th century, have been unearthed from beneath the soil. Fragments of shattered tombstones have been built into the cemetery wall abutting Ulica Szeroka.

The town houses of the former Jewish quarter still stand along this road; among them is the family home of Helena Rubinstein, founder of the cosmetics business. This part of town was immortalized in Steven Spielberg's film Schindler's List. The district now has shops and kosher restaurants.

Nearby, on the other side of the Vistula, is the Museum of National Remembrance. Located in a former pharmacy, it is dedicated to Jews that lost their lives in World War II.

This church (Kościół Norbertanek) and convent on the banks of the Vistula at Zwierzyniec was founded in 1162. The present appearance of the small nave church is due to rebuilding in 1595–1604. The extensive convent also dates from the early 17th century.

The Chapel of St Margaret (Kaplica św Małgorzaty), an octagonal building in the early Baroque style, was erected nearby, on Ulica św Bronisława. Behind the chapel is the Church of Our Saviour (Kościół Najświętszego Salwatora). Built in the second half of the 12th century, it was remodelled at the beginning of the 17th, when it was reduced to a small nave church with a tower at the west end.

In the charming residential district of Wola Justowska stands the Decjusz Villa, a manor house whose origins go back to the late Middle Ages.

It was rebuilt around 1530 in the Renaissance style for Justus Ludwik Decjusz, and acquired its present shape around 1620, when it was extended for Stanisław Lubomirski, Palatine of Cracow. It was then remodelled in the early Baroque style.

Visitors who want to make sure they get the best view of the Decjusz Villa, an impressive three-storey arched loggia that is flanked by towers, should view it from the garden. Today the villa houses the European Academy. There is a good restaurant in the basement.

Seen from afar, this monolithic Mannerist-Baroque monastery set on Srebrna Góra (Silver Mountain) appears to be a tempting tourist attraction. However, the monks, who are the monastery's sole inhabitants, are committed to absolute silence and no contact with the outside world. Visits are therefore severely restricted, especially for women.

The monastery was founded in the early 17th century by Valentin von Säbisch and completed by Andrea Spezza. It is richly adorned with Baroque features, and from the windows of the chapel it is possible to glimpse the monks' dwellings, to which visitors are not admitted.

was replaced in the 15th century by a Gothic church. The present Baroque abbey was built in 1618–22.

Although in the course of its stormy history the church has lost many fine and valuable features, it still retains its monumental Baroque altars. Some elements of the original Romanesque building have survived in the underground parts of the abbey adjacent to the church.

Behind the fine Baroque façade of the church, which was designed and erected by Franciszek Moser in 1779–80, lies a much older interior. Founded by Bishop Iwo Odrowąż, the Cistercian abbey was built in the 13th century. The consecration of the church took place in 1266. The interior of the early Gothic basilica, which contains a number of Renaissance paintings by Stanisław Samostrzelnik, has survived alongside later, mainly Baroque, features.

Other interesting parts of the abbey are the Gothic cloisters and the chapter house, which contains paintings by the 19th-century artist Michał Stachowicz. These depict the legend of Wanda, whose patriotism led her to throw herself into the Vistula. Her tomb, situated under a tumulus, is located nearby.

MAŁOPOLSKA (LESSER POLAND)

Malopolska is the country's most picturesque and varied region. Attractions such as the ski resort of Zakopane, hiking trails in the Tatra Mountains, the magical Black Madonna of Częstochowa and a lively folk tradition make it Poland's most popular tourist destination. Cracow, not only the regional capital but the spiritual and historic capital of the nation, is one of the noblest cities in Europe.

In the 9th century, the Vistulian tribe established a state in Małopolska. Their capital was Cracow, or Wiślica. In 990, Małopolska became part of the Polanian duchy of Mieszko I, and in 1039, Prince Kazimierz the Restorer made Cracow the centre of his realm of power. For centuries, Małopolska was the heart of Poland. However, its importance began to wane at the end of the 16th century, when the capital of the Republic was moved to Warsaw.

After the Partitions of Poland, Małopolska went into a gradual decline. While Galicia, its southern part, came under Austrian rule, its northern part was incorporated into the Russian empire. When Galicia gained autonomy within the Austro-Hungarian Empire, Galician towns, and especially Cracow, became important centres of Polish culture, retaining their identity despite a succession of annexations. Not until 1918, when Poland at last regained its independence, did Małopolska again become part of the Polish state.

The Małopolska region is dotted with picturesque towns, ruined castles, palaces, country mansions, great monasteries and pretty wooden churches. The eastern fringes of the region are distinguished by their Uniate Orthodox churches. There are also many monuments to the Jewish population that was present in Małopolska before 1945.

In many parts of the region, folk customs survive and flourish, nowhere more than in the Podhale region; in Zakopane, the regional capital of Podhale, folklore and folk art are a local industry.

Exploring Małopolska

Małopolska, in the south of Poland, is the country's main tourist region. Apart from Cracow, the greatest attractions for visitors are the mountain ski resort of Zakopane, which is the winter sports capital, and the picturesque Tatra Mountains. In summer many hikers are drawn to the region, and its mountains are traversed by well-marked hiking trails. There are numerous welcoming hostels for those in need of overnight shelter. Parts of the Beskid Niski Mountains are almost without human habitation, so that it is still possible to walk for several hours without encountering a single living soul. Spiritual relief can be found deep within the forests, where walkers may be surprised to encounter pretty wooden churches.

GETTING AROUND

Cracow and Rzeszów can be reached by air. The larger towns all have good rail links with the rest of the country. Some small villages can only be reached by bus or car. The E77 highway goes north and south from Cracow, while the E40 goes eastwards through Tarnów, Rzeszów and Przemyśl. Parallel to it, but further south, major road 28 connects Nowy Sącz with Biecz, Krosno and Sanok.

In a city whose beauty has been defaced by buildings that went up after World War II, the Bishops' Palace stands out like a jewel. It is an exceptionally fine example of a well-preserved aristocratic town house of the first half of the 17th century (see p45). The early Baroque façades with four corner towers have been preserved almost intact, as has the decoration of the rooms on the first floor. The marble doorways and beamed ceilings are original.

The palace was built in 1637–41, probably by the royal architect Giovanni Trevano, under the direction of Tomasso Poncino, for the Bishop of Cracow, Jakub Zadzik. During the reign of Zygmunt III, this exceptional clergyman was in charge of the Republic's foreign policy, successfully making peace with Russia and establishing a long-standing ceasefire with Sweden. His role as a bishop, however, was inglorious. He contributed to the shameful decision to condemn the Polish Brethren during the Sejm of 1641. These events are illustrated on the palace ceilings, which were painted in 1641.

The period interiors form part of the National Museum in the palace. There is also an excellent gallery of Polish painting here.

Next to the palace is the cathedral, built on the site of an earlier church of 1632–5, the time of Bishop Zadzik.

Several dozen wooden village buildings from the area around Kielce are laid out over an area of 4.2 sq km (1.6 sq miles) in the Kielce Rural Museum.

Holy Cross Mountains 3

Road map E5. 041 367 64 36 or 367 60 11.

In geological terms, the Holy Cross Mountains (Góry Świętokrzyskie) – part of the Małopolska uplands – are among the oldest in Europe. Eroded over many thousands of years, they are neither high nor steep, but they are exceptionally rich in minerals, which have been exploited since ancient times. The remains of prehistoric mines and furnaces have been found here. The Łysogóry range, with Mount Łysica at a mere 612 m (2,000 ft), the highest peak in the mountains, lies within the

The primeval forest of fir trees that once covered the range was seriously damaged by acid rain in the 1970s and 1980s, so that only vestiges remain today. In ancient times Łysa Góra, the second-highest peak in the Holy Cross Mountains, was a pagan place of worship. Its slopes are covered with goloborza, heaps of broken rock. Legend tells of the witches' sabbaths that are said to have taken place here.

The Benedictine abbey in Święty Krzyż on the summit of Łysa Góra was built in the 12th century and extended during the rule of the Jagiellonian dynasty. The church, which replaces an earlier Romanesque church, was built in 1782–9 and has predominantly Baroque and Neo-Classical features. The interior is decorated with paintings by the 18th-century artist Franciszek Smuglewicz. The cloisters and vestry, with late Baroque frescoes, date from the 15th century. The domed chapel of the Oleśnicki family, dating from the 17th century, is the abbey's most outstanding feature. Kept in the chapel since 1723, the relic of the Holy Cross attracts crowds of pilgrims. In the crypt beneath the chapel is a glass coffin containing the supposedly mummified body of Prince Jeremi Wiśniowiecki. In his novel With Fire and Sword Henryk Sienkiewicz portrayed this magnate as a saviour, and hero of the battles against Ukrainian insurgents in 1648. History judges him less kindly: a seasoned soldier, an unimaginative politician and a brute, who by passing sentences of impalement earned himself the nickname Palej (The Impaler).

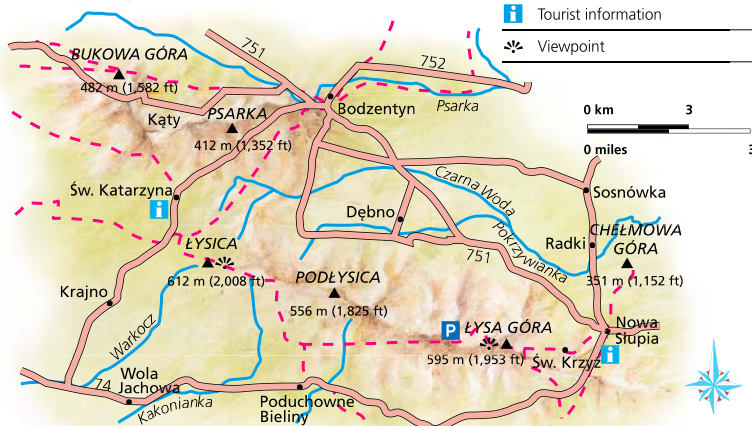

Bodzentyn, north of Łysogóry, is worth a visit for its 18th-century Gothic parish church. The Renaissance altar comes from Wawel Cathedral in Cracow. The stately ruins of the Bishops' Palace can also be seen in the town.

ŚWIĘTOKRZYSKI NATIONAL PARK

The Łysogóry range constitutes the major part of the park. Natural features of particular interest include goloborza, created by the fragmentation of quartzite sandstone, and vestiges of the primeval fir forest. On Chełmowa Góra, native Polish larch can be seen.

Road map E4. 3,300.

Wąchock is a neat town with a well-preserved

Cistercian abbey. It was founded in 1179 by Gedko z Gryfitów, Bishop of Cracow. The church, built in the early 13th century, has Romanesque and Gothic features. The architect is unknown, although the inscription “Simon” that can be seen on the façade is thought to be his signature. The interior is decorated with mural paintings and contains tombstones and altars. The most important Romanesque interiors of the abbey – those of the chapter house and the rooms off the cloisters – have been preserved almost intact to this day. The abbey was remodelled between 1636 and 1643, the façade being given the appearance of a palace with the addition of arcades and an enormous tower.

Road map E5. 7,100.

The collegiate church of St Martin (Kolegiata św. Marcina), built in the first half of the 12th century, is among the best-preserved of the major Romanesque churches in Poland. The massive façade has two quadrilateral towers and representations of dragons and plants on its borders. The interior contains interesting furnishings and tombs, the most eminent being the tomb with the bronze effigy of Krzysztof Szydłowiecki, the royal chancellor who became the owner of Opatów. The tomb dates from 1533–6 and bears a relief known as the Opatów Lament (see pp42–3). The marble tombstone of Anna Szydłowiecka carved by Bernardino de Gianoti in 1536 is also noteworthy.

The curious holes and ruts in the walls of the church are an unusual mark of the past. Noblemen would use the church walls to sharpen their sabres, which they would often do on horseback. This explains why the holes are so high.

Ujazd 6

The main attraction in Ujazd are the ruins of Krzyżtopór Castle, built for the palatine

Krzysztof Ossoliński, probably by Agostino Locci the Elder in 1627–47. It is one of the most eccentric residences of its time in Europe (see pp44–5). Having been attacked during the Swedish Deluge (see p44), the castle fell into neglect. The palace was enormous, and for 300 years its walls provided the surrounding villages with vast amounts of building material. However, the magnificent ruins are still extremely impressive.

The Mannerist and Baroque collegiate church in Klimontów, 13 km (8 miles) east of Ujazd, and begun in 1643, is something of an architectural curiosity. The elliptical nave with galleries is an unusual combination, and the columns sunk into niches hollowed out in the pillars make a mockery of the principles of tectonics.

The best view of this small, ancient town is from the River Vistula. In 1138, Sandomierz became the capital of an independent duchy, and from the 14th century until the Partitions of Poland it was a regional capital. Part of the network of underground passages that runs beneath the town is open to tourists.

The main entrance to the old town is Opatów Gate. The charming, slightly sloping Market Square is surrounded by elegant houses. In the centre stands the town hall, with its splendid Renaissance parapet. It houses the Regional Museum. The most important building in the town is the cathedral, built around 1360 on the site of an earlier Romanesque cathedral and later altered. The 15th-century Ruthenian-Byzantine frescoes in the chancel depict scenes from the lives of Christ and the Virgin.

The Church of St James (Kościół św Jakuba) is an exceptionally fine late Romanesque aisled basilica. Built in brick, it was begun in 1226. Its ceramic decoration and beautiful portal are evidence that it was built by master craftsmen from Lombardy. The remains of 49 Dominican friars murdered by Tartars in 1260 lie in the Martyrs' Chapel.

Leszczyński Castle, built in Baranów Sandomierski for the Leszczyński family in 1591–1606, is one of the finest examples of Mannerist architecture in Poland. The castle consists of four wings arranged around a rectangular arcaded courtyard. The grand exterior staircase and the façades, with their elaborate attics giving the impression of a massive (but in fact delicate) curtained wall, are striking. The square tower in the central façade serves a purely decorative purpose. On account of its architectural ornamentation, featuring spheres, rosettes and strange creatures, the castle is thought to have been designed by Santi Gucci. The Sulphur Basin Museum on the ground floor contains furniture, suits of armour and other interesting objects from the castle's heyday, as well as exhibits relating to the history of sulphur exploitation in the huge quarries nearby.

Road map E5. 950.

The main attraction of Rytwiany is the early Baroque Camaldolite church that stands next to the monastery. It was built in 1624–5 by the Tęczyński family and is considered to be one of the finest examples of Camaldolite architecture in Europe. In accordance with the rules of the order, the entrance to the sanctuary leads through a narrow passageway, with the tiny houses of the monks lying behind the monastery walls. The clock in the church tower marked the times for different activities in the monastery. The modest appearance of the façade contrasts with the exuberant interior: stuccowork is complemented by colourful frescoes painted by the prior, Venante da Subiaco. The church is hidden deep in the forest in a vast clearing, unfortunately beyond the reach of most tourists.

For the intrepid traveller, the ruins of the 15th-century Gothic castle of Wojciech Jastrzębiec, Archbishop of Gniezno, which stand on the edge of the village, are also worth visiting.

Features of interest are the town walls, 2 m (6 ft) thick and 680 m (2,230 ft) long, with spiked battlements, and the Market Square, dominated by the parish Church of St Władysław (Fara św Władysława), initially in the Gothic style but rebuilt in the 17th century.

In the 16th century, the town of Pińczów was an important centre of artistic and intellectual life. It is dominated by the castle built in the 15th century for Cardinal Zbigniew Oleśnicki. Oleśnicki was a politician and confidant of Władysław II and Kazimierz IV, as well as being a patron of the medieval Polish chronicler

Jan Długosz. During the Renaissance, the castle was remodelled for the Myszkowski family by Santi Gucci. It was dismantled before 1799, the result being that little remains today.

Between 1556 and 1586, the humanistic Calvinist college was active in Pińczów – just as the printing house of the Polish Brethren was to be a few decades later. A beautiful Renaissance house decorated with sgraffito is sometimes identified as the Polish Brethren's printing house: it is not, but it still merits the visitor's attention.

The Chapel of St Anne (Kaplica św Anny), on the top of the hill, is an unusual Mannerist building. It was founded in 1600 by Zygmunt Myszkowski and built, it is thought, by Santi Gucci.

In nearby Mirów, the Franciscan church and the 17th-century Mannerist-Baroque parish church, which has early Baroque vaulting and rich furnishings, are both worth a visit. In the vestibule of the parish church, a marble tombstone of a middle-class woman, Anna Jakubczyńska, who died in 1618, attracts the visitor's attention.

Also worth seeing is the late Renaissance synagogue, which is the last remaining trace of the Jews who once lived in Pińczów.

The image of the Black Madonna of Częstochowa, to which miraculous powers are attributed, is Jasna Góra's most precious treasure. Founded in 1382 by Pauline monks who came from Hungary at the invitation of Władysław, Duke of Opole (who probably brought the image of the Black Madonna to Częstochowa), the monastery withstood several sieges, including the legendary 40-day siege by the Swedes in 1655 (see p44).

Eagles' Nests Trail ①

The Cracow-Częstochowa upland is a limestone mountain range formed in the Jurassic period. Perched on rocky outcrops, some of the castles, most of which were built in the Middle Ages and ruined during the Swedish Deluge of the 1650s (see p44), resemble eagles' nests. Ojców National Park, with Pieskowa Skała Castle, encompasses some of the most beautiful upland areas. This castle was once the stronghold of kings, but at the end of the Middle Ages it passed into the hands of bandits – Piotr Szafraniec and his son Krzysztof – who lured rich merchants to their deaths. Today all is peaceful: tourist trails, rock-climbing and beautiful scenery.

Oświęcim (Auschwitz) 18

Road Map D5. 43,000.

Although the name Oświęcim means little to foreigners, its German equivalent, Auschwitz, evokes fear in almost everyone. It was here that the Nazis established their largest concentration and extermination camp. Auschwitz is synonymous with death, cruelty, the annihilation of the Jews and the Holocaust. It is a massive graveyard. No visitor can leave unmoved.

The Auschwitz camp, known as Auschwitz I, opened in June 1940 when the first Polish political prisoners arrived. In March 1941 a much larger camp at Birkenau (Brzezinka in Polish), Auschwitz II, was started, 3km (2 miles) from Oświęcim. Auschwitz III, a labour camp, was built nearby in Monowice in 1943. The Nazis brought in people, overwhelmingly Jews, from all over Europe. The gas chambers, which had the capacity to kill thousands daily, started working ceaselessly in 1942. Trains drew up to the ramp where people would be herded out for selection for extermination (the fate of the majority), forced labour or medical experiments. Those selected for extermination would be gassed and their bodies incinerated in one of the four crematoria. Apart from Jews, a number of Poles, Soviet prisoners of war, gypsies and homosexuals died here too.

For the Poles, Auschwitz is a particular symbol of their own suffering. It was here that St Maksymilian Kolbe died from starvation after volunteering his life for that of a fellow prisoner, who survived. Soviet forces liberated the camp in January 1945. They found 7,650 sick and dying prisoners when they arrived.

Above the entrance to Auschwitz are inscribed the words "Arbeit macht frei" ("Work makes you free"). The camp has been preserved as a memorial, and the prison blocks that survive have been turned into a museum charting the history of the camp and of persecution in wartime Poland. In all, between 900,000 and 1.5 million Jews and others were murdered in the extermination camps here. The camp is a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

Kalwaria Zebrzydowska is the oldest calvary in Poland and one of the most unusual. It was commissioned in 1600 by Mikołaj Zebrzydowski, the ruler of Cracow and an ardent Catholic, whose plan it was to replicate the layout of Jerusalem.

Herod's Palace, one of the stations of Kalwaria Zebrzydowska

The calvary (built 1605–32) consists of 40 chapels, set on the surrounding hills. The most distinctive are the work of the Flemish architect and goldsmith Paul Baudarth. Some have unusual shapes: the House of the Virgin Mary takes the form of the Mystic Rose, and the House of Caiaphas that of an ellipsis. Their façades have Dutch ornamentation. The large Baroque monastery church dates from 1702; the monastic buildings were constructed by Baudarth and Giovanni Maria Bernadoni in 1603–67.

For nearly 400 years, the calvary has attracted thousands of pilgrims. Passion plays are performed here during Holy Week, and the Feast of Assumption is celebrated in August.

Wieliczka is famous for its ancient salt mine, which was opened 700 years ago and is still being exploited today. Unique in the world, it has been listed by UNESCO as a World Heritage Site.

Only 2 km (1½ miles) of the network of underground galleries and chambers are open to the public. They reach a depth of 135 m (442 ft) and have a stable temperature of 13–14° C (55–57° F). The two-hour visit takes in ancient underground chambers, saline lakes, wooden mining machines and underground buildings. The most impressive of these is the Chapel of St Kinga, with altarpieces, chandeliers and sculptures made of salt. Additional figures carved in salt, the oldest dating from the 17th century, can be seen in other chambers. The Staszic Chamber has the highest ceiling, at 36 m (115 ft). At the end of the German occupation, the Nazis tried to establish an aircraft factory in the mines. There is also an underground sanatorium where respiratory diseases are treated.

The Salt Mine Castle at Ulica Zamkowa 8 is also worth a visit. From the 13th century right up until 1945 it was a base for the management of the salt mine. Today it houses a museum with – among other things – a splendid collection of antique salt mills.

In the 14th century, the royal castle at Niepołomice was the hunting base of Kazimierz the Great. Between 1550 and 1571 it was converted into a Renaissance palace by Zygmunt August. The entrance gate, dating from 1552, was once decorated with a Jagiellonian eagle; the plaque, with the Latin inscription “May the King Win and Live”, hints at its former splendour. The monarchs loved hunting in the game park nearby. In 1525 Zygmunt I brought “in a wooden trunk a great bear from Lithuania”. The bear hunt ended unhappily. Confronted by the angry animal, the pregnant Queen Bona Sworza turned and fled, falling from her horse and suffering a miscarriage.

At the castle in 1551, Queen Bona Sworza’s son, Zygmunt August, sat at the deathbed of his sweetheart wife, Barbara Radziwiłłówna. Their marriage had caused a moral and political scandal, and Queen Bona was unjustly suspected of poisoning her daughter-in-law.

Today, the forest is much smaller than it was in the time of the Jagiellonians. It is still, however, a sizeable nature reserve with plenty of secluded areas, and bison are raised there.

Tarnów received its municipal charter in 1330; the medieval layout of the old town is perfectly preserved and many ancient houses are still standing. Those around the arcaded Market Square are among the finest. The town hall, in the centre, dates from the 15th century and was remodelled in the second half of the 16th century by Giovanni Maria Padovano. The Renaissance attics and elegant portal date from that time.

The late Gothic Cathedral of the Nativity of the Virgin Mary (Katedra Narodzenia NMP) was built in 1400 and has been extended many times. It is the grandest building in Tarnów, its Gothic portal decorated with sophisticated iconography. Its Diocesan Museum is worth a visit.

The monuments, stalls, epitaphs and tombstones within are mostly those of the Tarnowski family, who at one time owned the town. The large tombs belonging to Grand Hetman Jan Tarnowski and his son Jan Krzysztof were fashioned by Giovanni Maria Padovano between 1561 and 1570.

The portraits of the deceased are remarkable. The marble bas-reliefs depict Jan Tarnowski's victories in battle at Orsza, Obertyn and Starodub. Tarnowski, a friend of the poet Jan Kochanowski, was known as a charismatic and witty commander as well as a renowned author of military theory.

Each of these early Baroque buildings was raised by Stanisław Lubomirski, Palatine of Cracow, in the 17th century. This rich and wise magnate earned renown in the Battles of Chocim against the Turks, and grew so strong that he “felt more powerful than the king”. Twice the emperor bestowed a dukedom on him. The castle, which previously belonged to the Kmita family, was extended by Lubomirski after 1615. It has corner towers, an arcaded courtyard and an unusual entrance gate, framed by enormous volutes. Now a prison, the monastery is not open to visitors. The façade of the parish church is one of the most unusual pieces of architecture in Poland, combining Baroque elements in a Mannerist way.

For over 100 years, the Polish people have regarded Zakopane as their country’s winter capital, on a par with alpine resorts as an upmarket winter sports and leisure centre.

Many tourists are also appreciative of Zakopane in the summer months. While some go hiking in the mountains, most are content to admire the scenery from the windows of their cable

Walking down Krupówki it is impossible to resist the market near the funicular railway station. On sale can be found leather kierpce (traditional highland moccasins), woollen highland pullovers, wooden ciupagi (highlanders’ sticks with decorative axe-like handles), and also bryndza and osypek (regional cheeses made from sheep’s milk).

Villa Atma, the wooden house where the composer Karol Szymanowski (see p26) lived from 1930 to 1936 now houses a museum dedicated to this eulogist of the Tatra Mountains.

The finest panorama of the Tatra Mountains from the northern, Polish side of the range is from Mt Gubałówka or Głodówka pod Bukowiną. The main attractions for tourists include the excursion to the Lake Morskie Oko (Eye of the Sea) and the ascent by cable car to the summit of Mount Kasprowy Wierch. historical monument is the Oświęcim Chapel in the Gothic Franciscan church. Completed in 1647, the chapel is decorated with exquisite stuccowork by Giovanni Battista Falconi. It contains the tombs of the half-siblings Anna and Stanisław, whose love ended in tragedy. The Market Square is surrounded by old arcaded houses, the most interesting of which is No. 7, with its Renaissance doorway.

Bieszczady Mountains Tour ①7

The Bieszczady mountains, together with the neighbouring Beskid Niski, are the wildest in Poland. Tourists return with blood-curdling tales of encounters with bears and wolves, or the discovery of a skeleton in the forest undergrowth. Needless to say, these stories are often exaggerated. Before World War II, the region was densely populated by Ukrainians and ethnic groups known as the Boyks and the Lemks. After the war, because of fighting and resettlements, it became deserted, and farming largely disappeared from the region by the 1970s. Pastures and burnt-out villages became overgrown as the forest encroached and wild animals returned to the mountains.

Polonina Wetlińska ⑥

Bieszczady National Park ⑤

The highest and wildest part of the mountains falls within Bieszczady National Park, which covers an area of 2,700 sq km (1,042 sq miles). In summer, many tourists walk the hiking trails. The main tourist base is in the small village of Ustrzyki Górne.

BIESZCZADY MOUNTAIN ANIMALS

The lynx, emblem of Bieszczady National Park, is not the only feline to make its home in these mountains. Wildcats also live here. They are rarely seen because they are very shy, concealing themselves in the forest undergrowth. Carpathian deer, with a population of 5,000, are more often encountered. Roe deer are also abundant and relatively tame. Wolves, a protected species numbering about 100 here, are more cautious.

Bison, kings of the Polish forest, number up to 120, and brown bear may also be seen. The Bieszczady Mountains are also popular with ornithologists for the many species of birds of prey: eagles, including the golden eagle, falcon and hawk.

Krasieczyn Castle is one of the most magnificent castles in the old Ruthenian territories of the Polish crown. Building began in 1592 on the site of an earlier castle by Stanisław Krasicki, castellan of Przewór. It was continued by his son Marcin and completed in 1608. The architect was Galeazzo Appiani.

The castle takes the form of an arcaded courtyard, with a tall clock tower over the gate and four stout cylindrical towers at the corners. The Divine Tower contains a chapel. The Papal Tower is crowned by a dome and decorated with a parapet symbolizing the papal tiara. The Royal Tower has a crown-shaped dome, and the Tower of the Gentry is topped with sword pommels.

The Baroque sgraffito on the walls is striking. Mythological scenes are depicted on the upper tier; the central tier is filled with portraits of the kings of Poland from the 14th-century Jagiellonian monarchs to Jan III Sobieski, King of Poland at the time, and portraits of nobles. In the lowest tier are medallions with the busts of Roman patricians. Little of the original decoration of the interior survives, as it was destroyed by fire in 1852, on the eve of the marriage of a later owner, Duke Leon Sapieha. The castle is open to visitors; the residential section contains a hotel and restaurant.

In Kalwaria Paclawicka, the 18th-century Franciscan monastery has about a dozen chapels marking the Stations of the Cross. Passion plays are performed here on Good Friday and many processions and plays are organized during the year for church festivities.

The history of Przemysł, picturesquely laid out on a hill and the banks of the River San, goes back to prehistoric times. In the Middle Ages it was a regional capital and lay on a busy trade route. The object of dispute between Poland and Ruthenia, it became part of Poland in 1340, later passing into Austrian control.

During World War I, the strongly fortified city successfully held out against the besieging Russian army. The fortifications from that time survive. From 1939 to 1941 the River San, which flows through the city, constituted a border between territory held by the Soviet Union and Germany.

The city's Catholic and Orthodox churches, together with its synagogues, are evidence of its multicultural history. Today, a Ukrainian minority lives alongside the city's Polish population.

The cathedral, remodelled in 1718–24, is predominantly in the Baroque style; of its earlier Gothic form only the chancel remains. Notable features of the interior include the Renaissance tomb of Bishop Jan Dziaduski, by Giovanni Maria Padovano, and the late Gothic alabaster figure of the Virgin from Jacków. Near the cathedral are the Baroque Church of the Discalced Carmelites and the former Jesuit church, now Uniate, dating from 1627–48. The castle, founded by Kazimierz the Great in the 1340s, stands on a hill above the city. The top of its tower offers a panorama of the city and the San valley.

The city of Jarosław owes its wealth to its location on the River San and the trade route linking the east with western Europe. In the 16th and 17th centuries, the largest fairs in Poland were held here. When Władysław IV attended a fair in Jarosław, he mingled with an international crowd and conversed with merchants from as far away as Italy and Persia. The Orsetti House, built in the style of an Italian Renaissance palazzo, testifies to the wealth of the city's merchants. The major attractions of Leżajsk are its Bernardine basilica and monastery, built by the architect Antonio Pellacini and the organ recitals that take place in the basilica, which was built in 1618–28. Its interior decoration and the furnishings, such as the oak stalls, pulpit and high altar, are mostly the work of the monks themselves. The basilica was established by Łukasz Opaliński, who earned renown by his defeat of the lawless magnate Stanisław Stadnicki in mortal combat.

The west end of the nave is filled with the complex organ, completed in 1693 and said to be the finest in Poland. The central theme of the elaborate Baroque casing is Hercules' fight with the Hydra, the nine-headed monster of Greek mythology. Not only is this a symbol of the age-old struggle of virtue against vice but also of Polish victory over the Turks, who were threatening Europe at the time.

The Jewish cemetery in Leżajsk is a place of pilgrimage for Jews from all over the world, who come to visit the tomb of Elimelech, the great 18th-century Orthodox rabbi.

The former Piarist Church of the Holy Cross (Kościół św Krzyża), extended in 1702–07 by Tylman van Gameren, and the Baroque monastery and Bernardine church of 1624–9 are also worth a visit. The remains of the old castle of the Ligez family can still be seen. It later passed into the ownership of the Lubomirskis, who surrounded it with bastions in the 17th century. The Market Square, with an eclectic town hall remodelled in 1895–8, is another interesting feature.

The town of Łańcut was purchased by Stanisław Lubomirski in 1629. Securing the services of the architect Maciej Trapola and the stuccoist Giovanni Battista Falconi, this powerful magnate went about building a fortified residence in the town. It was completed in 1641. After 1775 the palace, by then owned by Izabella Lubomirska, was extended and the interiors remodelled. The Neo-Classical Ballroom and the Great Dining Room were created during this period, and the magnificent gardens with their many pavilions laid out. In the 19th century, ownership of the palace passed to the Potocki family. From 1889 to 1914, the penultimate owners, Roman and Elżbieta Potocki, modernized the residence. The palace, now a museum, attracts numerous visitors.

Many pieces, mostly 19th-century, make up the collection on display; among them is this statue of Psyche carried by Zephyrs, a copy of a piece by John Gibson.

★ Ballroom

The Neo-Classical ballroom was designed by Christian Piotr Aigner in 1800. The stuccowork is by Fryderyk Baumann.

This typically French Neo-Rococo gilt clock is mounted in the mirror that hangs over the fireplace in the Billiard Room.

Façade

The palace façades are fundamentally Baroque. The rustication of the lower storey, however, is typical of French Renaissance style – part of the remodelling that the palace underwent at the end of the 19th century.

SILESIA

Silesia's great wealth of architectural monuments, its eventful history and its beautiful and varied landscape distinguish it from other regions of Poland. The region's well-preserved historic towns and the many hiking trails in the picturesque Sudeten Mountains make it an area that invites long exploration.

The stormy history of Silesia (Śląsk) and the great variety of cultural influences that have flourished here have given this region a rich heritage. It belonged initially to the Bohemian crown and passed into Polish control around 990.

When Poland split into principalities, Silesia began to gain independence. Divided into smaller independent duchies, it returned to Bohemian rule in the 14th century. After 1526, together with other Bohemian territories, it became part of the Habsburg Empire. During the Reformation, many of its inhabitants were converted to Lutheranism. The Thirty Years' War (1618–48) inflicted devastation on Silesia, bringing in its wake the repression of Protestantism. While Jesuits and Cistercians erected magnificent Baroque monasteries at that time, under the terms of the Peace of Westphalia of 1648, Protestants were limited to building the three "peace churches...". The Habsburgs lost Silesia to Prussia in 1742. Although the main language was German, many areas, especially the Opole region and Upper Silesia, were inhabited by an influential Polish minority. After World War I, as a result of the Silesian Uprisings of 1919–21, the eastern part of Upper Silesia, together with Katowice, was included within Polish borders. After 1945, nearly all of historical Silesia joined Poland, and its German population was deported. Poles who had been resettled from Poland's eastern provinces (which had been annexed by the Soviet Union) took their place.

Silesia is an enchanting region, not only for the breathtaking beauty of its mountain landscapes but also for its outstanding architecture. The medieval castles built to defend ancient borderlands, the grand Renaissance manor houses and impressive Baroque residences, the great Gothic churches and stately monasteries – all these provide ample attractions and a historic atmosphere.

Exploring Silesia

The most attractive part of the region is Lower Silesia. A good starting point for exploration is Wrocław, the provincial capital and a city full of historic buildings as well as interesting 20th-century architecture. From here, the area of Kotlina Kłodzka, with the fantastically shaped Table Mountains, is within easy reach. Not far away lies Jelenia Góra, a good base for hiking in the Karkonosze Mountains in summer or for skiing on the nearby slopes in winter. The visitor to Silesia will also find beautiful palaces and churches in almost every village. Many fine residences, however, are gradually falling into ruin.

GETTING AROUND

There are rail links between all the major Silesian cities, so that it is possible to travel by train from Wrocław to Jelenia Góra, Legnica, Głogów, Świdnica, Wałbrzych and Kłodzko. There are also good connections between Katowice, Opole and Wrocław, and trains also stop in Brzeg. Although smaller towns are accessible by bus, the service can be very infrequent, so that outside the major cities the best way to travel is by car. Parts of the motorway that will run through Silesia have already been opened.

Road map B4. 28,000. www.um.zagan.pl

The origins of Żagań go back as far as the 13th century. A particularly happy episode in the history of this pretty town on the River Bóbr was the period from 1845 to 1862, thanks to the beautiful Dorothea Talleyrand-Périgord, the youngest daughter of Peter Biron, Duke of Kurland.

Dorothea was something of a social magnet. She was a friend of Maurice Charles de Talleyrand, one of Louis Napoleon's ministers, and his nephew's wife. Her circle attracted the most eminent composers and writers of the day, among them Franz Liszt and Giuseppe Verdi. Her residence was the palace built for Albrecht von Wallenstein, a commander in the Thirty Years' War (1618–48). Dorothea had alterations made, and the palace's present Neo-Classical appearance and the layout of the rooms were commissioned by her in the mid-19th century. It now houses the Cultural Institute.

Other prominent buildings in the town are the Franciscan Church of Saints Peter and Paul (Kościół św św Piotra i Pawła), built in the Gothic style and dating from the 14th century. The enormous Church of the Assumption (Kościół Wniebowzięcia NMP), which once belonged to the Augustinians, also merits attention. It was built in stages from the late 13th to the early 16th century, although the finely furnished interior dates from the 1830s. The library of the monastery next to the church contains works by the 18th-century painter George Wilhelm Neunhertz and items connected to the German astronomer Johannes Kepler, who worked in Żagań between 1628 and 1630.

This town on the Odra River was established about 1,000 years ago but fell into ruin during World War II. Two Gothic churches, the collegiate Church of the Assumption, set on an island in the Odra, and the Church of St Nicholas in the old town, have not been rebuilt. However, the beautiful Jesuit Baroque Church of Corpus Christi (Kościół Bożego Ciała), built in 1694–1724 to a design by Giulio Simonetti, has been reconstructed. Its original twin-tower façade was added in 1711 by Johann Blasius Peintner. The picturesque town hall with its slender tower owes its present form to remodelling carried out by Augustus Solfer in 1831–4. It too has been reconstructed. On the bank of the Odra stands the castle of the dukes of Głogów, with an original 14th-century medieval tower and Gothic cellars, and later Baroque walls. It houses the Archaeological and Historical Museum. Among the exhibits are a collection of instruments of torture.

The gigantic Cistercian monastic complex situated on the high bank of the River Odra comes into view from a great distance. Cistercian monks first settled in Lubiąż in 1175. They built a Romanesque church followed by a Gothic basilica, of which the twin-tower façade and ducal chapel remain. The present abbey dates from 1681–1715. After World War II, it was used as a warehouse for unsold books, mostly works by Lenin. Its restoration began in the mid-1990s. An exhibition of Silesian sculpture as well as certain rooms of the monastery, including the refectory and the Ducal Hall, are now open to the public.

The ceiling of the refectory is decorated with paintings by Michael Willmann, whose work is also to be seen on the altars of the parish church in Lubiąż. The great Ducal Hall is a magnificent example of the late Baroque style, its purpose being to glorify the faith and the feats of the Habsburg dynasty.

 📍 Rynek 29 (076 851 22 80).

Legnica, after Wrocław and Opole Silesia's third-largest city, became the capital of the independent duchy of Legnica in the 13th century. Today it is a large administrative centre and copper-mining town, as evidenced by the displays in the Copper Museum.

The Parish Church of John the Baptist (Fara św Jana Chrzyciela) is one of the most beautiful Baroque shrines in Silesia, built for the Jesuits in 1714–27. The presbytery of the original church was converted into a chapel, the Mausoleum of the Silesian Piasts (1677–8).

In the northern part of the old town stands the Dukes' Castle. It has medieval origins and was remodelled many times. The fine Renaissance gate was added by George von Amberg in 1532–3. From here, Ulica Mariacka leads to the Gothic Church of the Virgin Mary (Kościół NMP), dating from the 14th century and remodelled in the first half of the 15th.

In the Market Square stand the Baroque town hall of 1737–46, which houses a theatre, and the Gothic Cathedral of Saints Peter and Paul (Katedra św św Piotra i Pawła), built in the 14th century and preserving a 13th-century baptismal font. In the centre of the Market Square are eight narrow arcaded houses known as the Herring Stalls and, at No. 40, a 16th-century house known as By the Quail's Nest House, with sgraffito decoration.

It was at Legnickie Pole that a great battle between the Poles, led by Henry II, the Pious, and the Tartars took place on 9 April 1241. Despite the Turks' defeat of the Poles and the death of their commander, Poland prevented westward Tartar expansion.

The Museum of the Battle of Legnica details this event.

The Benedictine abbey, dating from 1727–31 and built by Kilian Ignaz Dientzenhofer in the Baroque style, is the greatest attraction of this small village. The abbey church, dedicated to St Jadwiga, has an elliptical nave and undulating vaulting covered with trompe l'oeil paintings by Cosmas Damian Asam. Its furnishings are equally fine.

The capital of an independent duchy in the Middle Ages, Jawor is dominated by a castle that is a vestige of those times. Reconstruction has robbed the castle of much of its original splendour, but other buildings, which were painstakingly restored after World War II, enhance the town's historic atmosphere.

The most picturesque building is the large Church of Peace (Kościół Pokoju). It was one of three Protestant "peace churches" erected in Silesia after the Peace of Westphalia that marked the end of the Thirty Years' War (1618–48). It was built by Andreas Kempner, to a design by Albrecht von Säbisch, in 1654–6. With the church in Świdnica (see p185), it is among the world's largest timber-framed structures. Other notable buildings in Jawor are the 14th-century

Derived from the Polish word złoto, meaning gold, the town's name reflects the fact that the gold-rich sands of the River Kaczawa, which flows through Złotoryja, have been exploited since the Early Middle Ages. Even today gold-seekers flock to contests organized by the local gold-panning association.

Features of interest in Złotoryja include the Gothic Church of St Mary (Kościół NMP), which has a 13th-century presbytery, and the remains of the town walls.

It was extended in 1522–4 and over the next four centuries it was destroyed several times, once during the Thirty Years' War (1618–48). It was rebuilt in the Romantic style in 1906–8.

The walls, which follow the contours of the hill, are irregular. The castle's tower and living quarters survive.

At the bottom of the hill is the magnificent, although neglected, palace built for the Frankenberg family by Johann Blasius Peintner in 1718–27. Its overgrown surroundings were once attractive gardens.

Lwówek Śląski is a small town set on a precipice overlooking the River Bóbr, in the foothills of the Izerski Mountains. Remnants of the stone walls that once surrounded the settlement can be seen all around.

The centrepiece of the town is its Gothic-Renaissance town hall. Built in the 15th century, it was extended in 1522–5 and restored in 1902–5, when the delightful arcades around the building were added. Several town houses of historical interest stand in the Market Square.

The twin-towered Church of the Assumption (Kościół Wniebowzięcia) has an imposing Romanesque façade which dates from the 13th century. The tympanum over the portal depicts the Coronation of the Virgin. The main body of the church was not added until the turn of the 16th century. The Gothic chapel on the south side, which dates from 1496, has vaulting with beautiful 16th-century frescoes.

The ruins of another Gothic church also survive in Lwówek Śląski.

The church was built by Franciscan monks but fell into disuse in 1810.

The castle dates from the 14th century, and because it was destroyed and rebuilt several times over many centuries, incorporates a range of architectural styles.

It was most recently renovated in the early part of the 20th century, when the Gütschoff family of Dresden had their dilapidated family seat rebuilt by Bodo Ebhardt in 1904–14. Ebhardt's Romantic vision restored Zamek Czocha to its former glory and the castle has since been used as the setting for several films. It is now an atmospheric hotel (see p304).

The Foothills of the Karkonosze Mountains 12

The Karkonosze Mountains, the highest in the Sudeten (Sudety) chain, draw holidaymakers all year round. There are many footpaths and good facilities for hikers throughout the summer, while in winter skiers come to enjoy the exhilarating pistes. The upper parts of the Karkonosze Mountains are a national park, recognized by UNESCO as a World Biosphere Reserve.

In the lower parts of the mountains are several attractive small towns, such as Karpacz and Szklarska Poręba, as well as Cieplice and Sobieszów in Jelenia Góra district (see p184).

Szklarka Waterfall ②

A forest of fir trees provides a scenic setting for the 15-m (45-ft) waterfall.

Sobieszów: Chojnik Castle ⑥

Situated on a high escarpment, this 14th-century castle was built for Duke Bolko II. In the 15th and 16th centuries it was renovated by the Schaffgotsch family, but in 1675 was gutted by a fire after being struck by lightning.

Cieplice ①

This popular spa town has a number of fine Baroque buildings, including Schaffgotsch Palace and its Cistercian and Protestant churches. There is also a natural history museum.

Myslakowice ⑧

The village is noted for its Neo-Gothic palace, which once belonged to Kaiser Friedrich Wilhelm IV, for a church designed by Karl Friedrich Schinkel and for Tyrolean-style houses built by religious refugees fleeing persecution in the Tyrol.

TIPS FOR DRIVERS

Tour length: About 70 km (46 miles).

Stopping-off points: Bars and restaurants can be found in Szklarska Poręba, Cieplice and Karpacz. The Spjy restaurant in Milków is recommended.

Other attractions: Karpacz also has a chair lift to Kopa, which is one hour's walk from Mt Śnieżka. Another chair lift from Szklarska Poręba goes to Szrenica.

This tiny village in the Góry Kamienne Mountains has one of the most picturesque groups of historic buildings in Poland. Benedictine monks settled here in 1242, followed by Cistercian monks in 1292. They were responsible for building the Church of St Joseph (Kościół św Józefa), which has frescoes by Michael Willmann, in 1690–96. They also built the abbey Church of St Mary (Kościół NMP Łaskawej) in 1727–35. The interior is decorated with vertiginous trompe l'oeil paintings by Georg Wilhelm Neunhertz; sculptures by Anton Dorazil and Ferdinand Maximilian Brokoff make the pilasters, cornices and vaulting appear to float in mid-air. The figures of saints on the stalls in the chancel are of particular interest.

Behind the presbytery is the Mausoleum of the Silesian Piasts (Mauzoleum Piastów Śląskich), with the Gothic tombs of Bolko I (d. 1301) and Bolko II (d. 1368), dukes of Świdnica-Jawor. Figures of their wives, Agnieszka and Beatrycze, stand opposite the tombs. On the wall is an epitaph by the son of Bolko II, the last member of the Piast dynasty.

Situated at the foot of the Karkonosze Mountains, Jelenia Góra is a favourite tourist destination and a major starting point for mountain hikers. The town was granted city status at the end of the 13th century. It was once renowned for its textiles – delicate batiste and voile that were exported as far as Africa and America. It was also one of the main centres of engraved glassware, examples of which can be seen in the Regional Museum.

The town's historic centre is the Market Square, with a Baroque town hall surrounded by arcaded town houses. In Ulica Maria Konopnicka, east of the Market Square, is the Church of Saints Erasmus and Pancras (Kościół św św Erazma i Pankracego), a Gothic basilica of the late 14th to early 15th centuries. The line of the old defensive walls here is marked by a chapel that was once a keep.

In Ulica 1 Maja, on the same axis, is the Church of Our Lady, with two penitentiary crosses (see p185) set into the outer walls. The street then leads to the Baroque former Protestant Church of the Holy Cross (Kościół św Krzyża), known also as the Church of Peace.

The town boundaries of Jelenia Góra were expanded in 1976 and now include the spa of Cieplice, with its Natural History Museum, and the town of Sobieszów (see pp182–3), which includes the Karkonosze National Park Natural History Museum.

Książ Castle, on the outskirts of Wałbrzych, is the largest residential building in Silesia. This huge edifice was built on a rocky hilltop overlooking the surrounding wooded countryside. The late 13th-century Gothic castle of Prince Bolko I was rebuilt in the mid-16th century for the Hochberg family of Meissen, who remained its owners until World War II. One of the most powerful Silesian families, they extended the building several times, particularly in 1670–1724 and 1909–23. The Hochbergs' reputation was coloured by several scandals. The penultimate owner of the castle was Hans Henry XV von Pless. After divorcing his wife, he married a much younger Spanish woman. She gave birth to a daughter, but then left the elderly prince for his son Bolko.

During World War II attempts were made to convert the castle into headquarters for the German leader Adolf Hitler by drilling tunnels into the rocky hill. Today part of the castle houses a museum, a hotel and a restaurant. The grounds are now the Książ Nature Park. The stables and palm house, still in use, are open to visitors.

For almost 100 years from 1292, Świdnica was the capital of the independent duchy of Świdnica-Jawor. It minted its own coins and was renowned for its beer, which was exported to many cities in central Europe. The town's mercantile traditions are well illustrated in the Museum of Silesian Trade that is housed in the town hall.

From the pretty market square, with its fine Baroque plague column (see p177), Ulica Długa, the main street, leads to the 14th-century Church of Saints Stanisław and Wenceslas (Kościół św św Stanisława i Wacława), a Gothic building with the highest tower in Silesia. The interior is richly furnished and decorated in styles ranging from Gothic to Baroque. The altar canopy was made by Johann Riedel in 1694. The town's most impressive building, however, is the Church of Peace (Kościół Pokoju). With that in Jawor (see p180), it is one of two surviving Protestant "peace churches" built after the Peace of Westphalia that ended the Thirty Years' War (1618–48). The timber-framed church, designed by Albrecht von Säbisch, was built in 1656–7. Its undistinguished exterior conceals an unusual interior, with a two-tiered gallery, fine paintings and furnishings.

Mt Śleża is a conical peak visible from great distances all around. Used as a location for religious rituals during the Bronze Age (3500–1500 BC), it is crowned with a stone circle, and mysterious statues of unknown origin stand beside the road leading to the summit. The best view of the surrounding countryside is from the terrace of the Neo-Romanesque church built on Mt Śleża in 1851–2. The hill of neighbouring Wiezyca has at its summit a tower erected in honour of the German statesman Otto von Bismarck in 1906–7, and is also a good vantage point from which to view the entire area.

In Sobótka, at the foot of Mt Śleża, a former hospital built by Augustinian monks houses the Śleża Museum. The best place to stay, or stop for lunch, is the hotel Zamek Górka, located in a Gothic-Renaissance Augustinian presbytery that later became the palace of the von Kulmiz family.

In 1203 Jadwiga, wife of Henry I, brought an order of Cistercian monks from Bamberg, in southern Germany, to Trzebnica. Jadwiga was buried here and, after her canonization in 1267, the monastery became an important place of pilgrimage. The entire complex underwent major rebuilding in the second half of the 1600s, obliterating its Romanesque architecture, although the tympanum of the main portal retains a fine relief of around 1230 representing the Old Testament figures David and Bathsheba. The Gothic chapel of St Jadwiga contains her Baroque-style tomb, dating from 1677–8. The figure of the saint was carved by Franz Josef Mangoldt in 1750.

Beside the presbytery is a Baroque chapel built in memory of the dukes of Wurtemberg, and containing the Renaissance tombs of Jan and Jerzy Podiebrad. Other attractive elements include the stylish Mannerist pulpit from 1605 and the Gothic stalls from the late 15th and early 16th centuries. impressive building is without doubt the Castle of the Dukes of Legnica-Brzeg. The castle was transformed into a Renaissance palace in the second half of the 16th century. The three-winged complex features a circular courtyard and a tower over the entrance gate dating from 1554. The walls are decorated with busts of all the ancestors of Duke Jerzy II and his wife Barbara von Brandenburg. Today the castle houses the Museum of the Silesian Piasts.

Other buildings of interest are the town hall, erected in 1570–7, the 14th-century Church of St Nicholas (Kościół św. Mikołaja) and the late Baroque Jesuit church, which was built in 1734–9.

In 1526, with the whole Czech state, it was incorporated into the Habsburg Empire, and in 1741 was transferred to Prussian rule.

The town hall in Wrocław is one of the most important examples of Gothic architecture in central and eastern Europe. Its present appearance is the result of an extensive period of rebuilding that took place between 1470 and 1510.

The town hall's southern façade was embellished with Neo-Gothic stone carvings in around 1871. Inside are impressive vaulted halls, the largest being the triple-aisled Grand Hall on the ground floor, and several late Gothic and Renaissance doorways.

Outside the entrance to the town hall is a plaque commemorating the prominent poet and comedy writer Aleksander Fredro (1793–1876), who acquired fame with his comedies about the Polish upper classes. The plaque was made in 1879 by Leonard Marconi and transferred to Wrocław from Lviv in 1956 (see p.25).

The church has suffered damage from a succession of wars, fires and accidents. A fire in 1976 destroyed the roof and the splendid Baroque organ. Fortunately, more than 350 epitaphs and tombstones have survived, forming a remarkable exhibition of Silesian stone-carving from Gothic to Neo-Classical times.

Ostrów Tumski was once an island in the River Odra, and it is here that the history of Wrocław began. According to legend, the city was founded by Duke Vratislav of Bohemia. In the year 1000 a bishopric was established and the island grew into a centre of ducal power. After the city moved to the left bank of the Odra in 1292, the island remained the base of ecclesiastical authority. In the 19th century the northern arm of the Odra was filled in and Tumski ceased to be an island. Tumski Bridge connects it to

Wrocław boasts the most attractive botanical gardens in Poland. They were established in 1811 by two professors from the University of Silesia in Katowice, and after being totally destroyed in World War II were reverently re-created. The gardens' central area contains ponds fashioned from what was an arm of the River Odra when Ostrów

Tumski was still an island. The gardens contain palms, an alpine garden, cactuses and a 19th-century model of the geology of the Silesian town of Wałbrzych. On a walk through the gardens 7,000 plant species can be seen and a bust of the Swedish botanist Carolus Linnaeus (1708–78), dating from 1871, stands among the greenery. A branch of the gardens, with an extensive arboretum, has been established in Wojsławice, near Niemcza.

Around Central Wrocław

Many places of interest lie within walking distance of central Wrocław. A relaxing day can be spent at the zoo, the museums of natural history, geology and mineralogy and in Szczytnicki Park. The Jewish cemetery gives a fascinating insight into Poland's past. There are also several notable 20th-century buildings, such as the People's Hall and the 1920s Mieszkanie i Miejsce Pracy housing estate.

Wrocław has one of the largest and best laid-out zoos in Poland, thanks to its long-standing directors Hanna and Antoni Gucwiński, who for many years presented a TV programme on animal photography. The zoo, founded in 1865, is situated above the River Odra opposite Szczytnicki Park. While walking among the animal paddocks, it is worth taking a look at the old pavilions, which feature a variety of architectural styles.

The People's Hall (Hala Ludowa), originally known as the Century Hall, was intended to be the centrepiece of an exhibition commemorating the centenary of the coalition's victory over Napoleon at Lipsk. It was designed by Max Berg and built in 1911–13. At the time of its construction, it was regarded as one of the finest modern buildings in Europe. The centre of the hall is covered by a reinforced concrete dome with a diameter of 65 m (200 ft). It is lit by a sophisticated method – the openwork design inside the stepped tambour consists of rows of windows that can be shaded or uncovered as required. The auditorium can accommodate up to 5,000 people. The hall has functioned as a concert hall and theatre, and today is used for sports events and trade fairs. Around the hall are some of the pavilions of the Historical Exhibition. It is also worth walking through the old exhibition grounds and seeing the oval pond, which is surrounded by shady pergolas. A steel needle 96 m (316 ft) in height made by Stanisław Hempel, stands outside the main entrance. It was erected here in 1948.

🌿 Szczytnicki Park

North of the exhibition area is an extensive park whose history dates back to the 18th century. It was originally the site of the residence of Duke Friedrich Ludwig von Hohenlohe-Ingelfingen, but that building was destroyed during the Napoleonic Wars (1799–1815), after which the area was remodelled as a landscaped park.

One of Szczytnicki Park's distinctive features is its delightful Japanese garden, which has been painstakingly restored with the help of Japanese gardening experts.

The footbridges and pathways that run among the pavilions and plants make a charming setting for a leisurely walk. Look out for the rose garden and a small 12th-century wooden church that was brought over from Stare Koźle and reconstructed.

of residential architecture in the 1920s. The houses were examples of different residential buildings designed for the Exhibition of Living and Working Space organized by the Deutscher Werkbund movement in 1929. Many prominent German architects took part in the project. The most impressive building is an apartment block (at Ulica Kopernika 9) designed by Hans Scharoun, architect of several buildings in Berlin, including the National Library and the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra's Concert Hall. Modern architure enthusiasts should also visit Sepolno, which was built in 1924–8 and is a fine example of a garden city.

The small town of Henryków is known for its Cistercian church, founded in 1227 by Henryk the Bearded. A series of allotments surrounding the abbey separate the church and monastery from the street, so that access to the church is by way of a series of gates. The church, originally in the Gothic style, was rebuilt in the early 14th century and remodelled in the Baroque style by Matthias Kirchberger in 1687–1702. Prominent features of the Baroque interior are the high altar, with The Birth of Christ in the Vision of St Bernard of Clairvaux by Michael Willmann, and the large, highly ornamented choir stalls. A plague column outside the church depicts the four archangels.

Other points of interest are the extensive monastery and the scenic park laid out at the rear of the monastery in the early 18th century. A summerhouse stands in the ark.

The small town of Kamieniec Ząbkowicki is dominated by the 14th-century Gothic church and Baroque monastery of its Cistercian abbey, which was founded in 1272.

There is also a Neo-Gothic castle, perched on a hill but well worth the effort of a climb to visit. It was commissioned by Marianna Orańska in the 1870s, and after her death was completed for her son, Duke Albrecht of Prussia. The architect was Karl Friedrich Schinkel. A massive residence with large circular external towers and two internal piazzas, the castle has an ideal symmetry. Its magnificent ballroom has palm vaulting supported on a single central basalt column.

Unfortunately the palace's once superb art collection and library were destroyed just after World War II. Today the castle, while not yet wholly reconstructed, is open as a hotel. It stands in an attractive overgrown park.

From the 14th century until 1810, Otmuchów belonged to the bishops of Wrocław. Its historic buildings are all in close proximity around the sloping Market Square. On the lower side is the Renaissance town hall, built in 1538, with a later tower. On the upper side is the Baroque parish church of 1690–6, and the Palace of the Bishops of Wrocław. Nysa, founded in 1223, was once the capital of the dukes of Wrocław and the see of the duchy of Nysa (Niesse). In the 16th and 17th centuries it became the residence of the Catholic bishops of Wrocław, who were driven there from Ostrów Tumski during the Reformation. After 1742 the Prussians enclosed the town with ramparts. Despite suffering massive destruction during World War II, Nysa retains a number of interesting buildings. The town centre is dominated by the Gothic Church of Saints James and Agnieszka (Kościół św św Jakuba i Agnieszki), with a separate belfry dating from the early 16th century. The well beside it, covered with unusual wrought ironwork, is known as the Beautiful Well and dates from 1686. Of Nysa's many churches, the finest are the Church of Saints Peter and Paul (Św Św Piotra i Pawła) and the Jesuit Church of the Assumption (Wniebowzięcia NMP). Also of interest are the bishop's palace and manor, which stand beside a group of Jesuit buildings. The palace houses a local history museum.

The vast conurbation of 14 towns that make up the Upper Silesian Industrial Region (Górnśląski Okręg Przemysłowy) was created by the coal-mining industry, which has been active in the area since the 18th century. The conurbation's hardworking inhabitants have their own unique dialect, which is spoken especially by the older generation.

Gliwice, one of 14 towns comprising the Upper Silesian Industrial Region

After World War I and following the three Silesian uprisings of 1919–21, almost the entire region was incorporated into Poland. Although the towns, with their mines, steelworks and power stations, seem unappealing, the region is of interest to tourists. Katowice, the capital, has particularly interesting buildings dating from the interwar years. In Kościusz Park stands a wooden church of 1510 that was moved here from Syryna, a Silesian village, as well as the Archdiocesan Museum and Museum of Silesia. WIELKOPOLSKA (GREATER POLAND)

Wielkopolska (Greater Poland) is the cradle of Polish statehood. It was here in the mid-10th century that the Polonians, the strongest of the Polish tribes, set up an enduring state structure. It was also in this region that the Piast dynasty, the first Polish dynasty, emerged to rule the country in the 10th century. The first two capitals of Poland, Gniezno and Poznań, lie in Wielkopolska.

During the Thirty Years' War of 1618–48, the region of Wielkopolska was settled by large numbers of dissenting Germans, particularly from neighbouring Silesia. The Protestant faith of the incomers set them apart from the existing inhabitants, who were Catholics.

During the Partitions of Poland, Wielkopolska was divided. Under the terms of the Congress of Vienna of 1815, the larger western part fell under Prussian rule, and the smaller eastern part came under Russian control. In the second half of the 19th century the Prussian part of Wielkopolska was subjected to repeated but unsuccessful campaigns of Germanization. Polish activists fought back in the courts and laid the economic foundations for the Polish section of the population. At the end of 1918, insurrection broke out in the western part of Wielkopolska and almost the entire region as it had been before the Partitions was reincorporated into the Polish state.

The inhabitants of Wielkopolska have a long-standing reputation for thrift and orderliness. The years of Soviet domination that followed World War II strained these qualities to the limit, although the local state-owned farms worked more efficiently than those in other parts of the country and many palaces and country mansions have survived in better condition than was the case elsewhere.

Poznań, the capital of Wielkopolska, abounds in historic buildings, as do other towns in the region. Almost every town, however small, contains something of interest. Wielkopolska maintains its identity: to this day the customs preserved in many of the region's towns and villages are distinct from those in other parts of Poland.

Old windmills in a typical Wielkopolska setting

Exploring Wielkopolska

Wielkopolska's extensive territory is mainly low-lying, but the landscape is far from monotonous. In the northern part of the region is a hilly area, with vast forests and lakes, that is ideal country for a walking or cycling holiday. Besides Poznań, the regional capital, other towns of interest include Gniezno, seat of an archbishopric and the first capital of Poland. In the area around Gniezno traces of the rise of Polish statehood can be seen on Ostrów Lednicki, in Strzelno, and in Kruszwica on Lake Gopło.

GETTING AROUND

Wielkopolska is situated on main transport routes between eastern and western Europe. The efficient express train service from Berlin to Poznań takes just under 3 hours, and the journey from Warsaw by express train also takes about 3 hours. All the larger towns of the region have rail connections, while smaller ones can be reached by bus. Roads are generally good, although Poznań suffers from almost permanent traffic jams. Poznań can also be reached by air, although the number of international connections is limited.

Its present late Baroque appearance dates from after 1737; further building work was carried out by Karl Martin Frantz in 1742, when paintings by Wilhelm Neunhertz were added to the ballroom ceiling. The ballroom was destroyed by fire in 1945.

The ceiling was painted in honour of the palace's owner, Prince Józef A. Sułkowski. A member of a noble family of relatively low rank, he was catapulted to success at the court of August III, but fell from the king's favour in 1738 and was replaced by Henryk Brühl. The palace remained in the possession of the Sułkowskis into the early 20th century, when it was sold to the Prussian rulers. It is now a hotel (see p306).

The Market Square is lined with Baroque houses, the town hall and two Baroque churches: the Parish Church of St Stanisław (Kościół św Stanisława) designed by Karl Martin Frantz and Ignacy Graff in 1746–51, and the Protestant church, dating from 1779–83, also by Graff.

Road Map C3. 6,000. www.kornik.pl

Set on an island and surrounded by a landscaped park, Kórnik Castle is one of the most picturesque castles in Poland. Its present appearance dates from the 19th century, when it was rebuilt in the English Neo-Gothic style by Karl Friedrich Schinkel. There have also been some subsequent alterations.

The castle's original interior survives: the Moorish Hall is decorated in the style of the Alhambra Palace in southern Spain and in the Dining Room the ceiling is covered with the coats of arms of all the Polish knights who fought at the Battle of Grunwald (1410). An inscription in Turkish on the ceiling of one hall is an expression of thanks to Turkey, which refused to recognize the partition of Poland. The castle also contains a collection of 18th- and 19th-century porcelain and other pieces.

The castle became the repository of the art treasures that were once kept at Czartoryski Palace in Puławy (see p119). In order to acquire the library at Puławy, Tytus Działyński persuaded his son Jan to marry Izabella, heiress to the Czartoryski fortune.

The castle has an extensive library and a museum.

The museum's collections include a display of 16th to 19th century Polish and foreign paintings, as well as sculpture, drawings and an intriguing array of militaria, including a complete suit of armour. The Kórnik Library contains manuscripts of Polish poets' works and a substantial collection of prints and maps. There is also a park that contains an arboretum with many rare species of trees, and a walk here is a relaxing way to round off a visit.

Raczyński Palace, in the village of Rogalin, is one of the most magnificent buildings in Wielkopolska. It was begun in around 1770 for Kazimierz Raczyński, Palatine of Wielkopolska and Grand Marshal of the Crown.

It was designed in the Baroque style, but during construction the architectural ornamentation was abandoned. The imposing main building, however, retains its late Baroque solidity. In 1782–3 curving colonnades were added and complemented by annexes in the classic Palladian style. A drawing room and grand staircase designed by Jan Chrystian Kamsetzer were added in 1788–9.

Poznań 5

Poznań is the capital of Wielkopolska and its largest city. A stronghold by the name of Polan stood here in the 8th century, and in the 10th century it was the capital of the emerging Polish state. In 968 it became the seat of the first bishopric in Poland. Poznań has many historic buildings, the finest of which are the cathedral and those in the old town. A visit to the late 19th-century quarter is also rewarding. Today Poznań is Poland's second financial centre after Warsaw and a major centre of commerce. Annual trade fairs attended by producers and traders from all over the world have been held here since 1921.

The Church of the Heart of Jesus (Kościół Serca Jezusowego), built in the 13th century, is the oldest church in the old town. It was a Dominican church until 1920, when it passed to the Jesuits. During the German occupation in World War II, a repository was set up here for Polish books removed from the libraries of Poznań.

Old Market Square

The Old Market Square (Stary Rynek) is the heart of the old town. It is surrounded by town houses with colourful façades, among which stands the Renaissance town hall. The ground floors of the buildings around the square are filled mainly by banks, cafés and restaurants, and the streets leading off the square contain elegant shops. From spring to autumn the square bustles with life, and the outdoor cafés with their tables and colourful sunshades are permanently busy. Local artists display their paintings, while children play on the steps of the town hall. The square is also a venue for cultural events.

Some of the houses in the Old Market Square were destroyed during the battles for Poznań in 1945, and were rebuilt after World War II, but others escaped serious damage. They include Mielżyński Palace, which dates from 1796–8, and Działyński Palace, both in the Neo-Classical style.

Poznań's town hall is one of the finest municipal buildings in Europe. It was built in 1550–60 by the Italian architect Giovanni Battista di Quadro. The façade has three tiers of arcades, topped by a grand attic and a large tower and decorated with portraits of the kings of Poland.

The greatest tourist attraction is the clock tower, where at noon each day two clockwork goats emerge from doors 12 times to butt heads.

Construction work on this Baroque church, which was originally built for use as a Jesuit chapel, began in 1651 and continued for more than 50 years. Several architects, craftsmen and artists had a role in this extended project, among them Tommaso Poncino, Bartołomiej Wąsowski and Jan Catenaci.

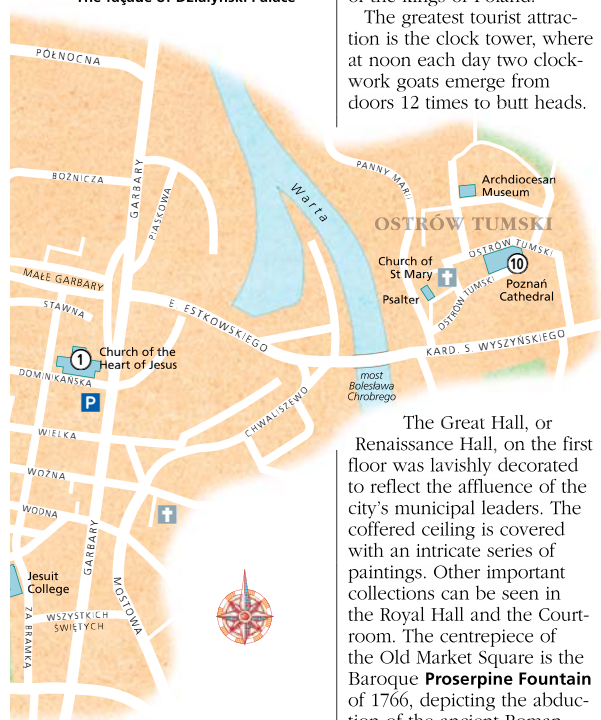

The most impressive aspect of the church is probably its monolithic interior. Gigantic columns along the walls lead the eye towards the illuminated high altar, which was designed and constructed in 1727 by Pompeo Ferrari.

The Baroque buildings of a former Jesuit monastery and college stand close to the church. They were built for the brotherhood in 1701–33. Today, however, they are used for secular business by the members of Poznań's town council.

The Great Hall, or Renaissance Hall, on the first floor was lavishly decorated to reflect the affluence of the city's municipal leaders. The coffered ceiling is covered with an intricate series of paintings. Other important collections can be seen in the Royal Hall and the Courtroom. The centerpiece of the Old Market Square is the Baroque Proserpine Fountain of 1766, depicting the abduction of the ancient Roman fertility goddess Proserpine by Pluto, ruler of the underworld. Nearby stands a copy of a stone pillory of 1535 and a 20th-century fountain with the figure of a Bamberka, a peasant woman from the Poznań area (see p216). It commemorates the Catholic settlers who were sent to Poznań at the beginning of the 18th century from Bamberg, in southern Germany. Soon they became Polonized, although many of the city's inhabitants still claim to be descendants of the Bamberg settlers.

Poznań holds much of interest beyond the old town. The Bernadine church in Plac Bernardyński has a remarkably narrow twin-towered façade built in the 18th century by Jan Steyner. It is matched by the former Lutheran Church of the Holy Cross (Kościół św Krzyża), dating from 1777–83. Walking

The Gallery of European Art, which is housed in a new modern wing of the museum, contains works from various collections, including that of Atanazy Raczyński, brother of the philanthropist Count Edward Raczyński (see p212). With its façade of columns, the Raczyński Library combines grandeur with elegance, and cannot be compared with any other building in Poznań. The idea for a library was initiated by Count Edward Raczyński in 1829. The aim of this visionary aristocrat was to turn Poznań into a “New Athens”; the library was to be a centre of culture and “a shrine of knowledge”. Although the library’s architect is unknown, it is thought to have been built by the French architects and designers Charles Percier and Pierre

Another element of the “New Athens” of Poznań was to be a gallery (now non-existent) for the outstanding art collection owned by Edward Raczyński’s brother, Atanazy (see p212).

Former Kaiser District

After the Second Partition of Poland in 1793, Poznań came under Prussian rule. In the second half of the 19th century, Prussia heightened its policy of Germanization in Wielkopolska. One of its instruments was the Deutscher Ostmarkenverein (“German Union of the Eastern Marches”), which the Poles called the “Hakata” colonization commission from the acronym of the initials of its founders. When the city’s ring of 19th-century fortifications was demolished, a decision was made to use the new space for government buildings. Designed by the German town planner Josef Stübben, they were built in 1903–14 and today stand amid gardens, squares and avenues, with a theatre, the colonization commission, a post office and the royal academy (now the university). Dominating the scene is the Kaiserhaus, designed by Franz Schwechten. The castle was rebuilt by the Germans, but little survives of its original splendour apart from a marble imperial throne and the décor of some of the rooms. The chairs from the Great Hall are now in the Sejm (parliament) in Warsaw. Today the Kaiserhaus accommodates the Kaiserhaus Cultural Centre.

Beside it, in Plac Mickiewicza, stands the Monument to the Victims of June 1956, which takes the form of two large crosses. The monument was unveiled in 1981 to commemorate the violent suppression of the workers’ uprising in Poznań in 1956 (see p52).

It contains the tomb of Mikołaj Jan Skrzetuski, who died in 1668 and on whom Henryk Sienkiewicz (see p25) based the hero of his historical saga With Fire and Sword.

The other is the small Gothic Church of St Adalbert, forming a pantheon with practically the same function as the Pauline Church on the Rock in Cracow (see p143). In the crypt are the remains of great figures in the history of Wielkopolska. They include Józef Wybicki (1747–1822), who wrote the Polish national anthem, and the Australian traveller and scientist Paweł Edmund Strzelecki (1797–1873). A striking contrast to the rest of the building is the ultra-modern glass, concrete and stainless steel entrance to the crypt, which was designed by Jerzy Gurawski in 1997.

THE POZNAŃ TRADE FAIR

The trade fair area is in the city centre, the main entrance lying opposite Dworcowy Bridge. The Poznań International Trade Fair has been held here every year since 1921. It takes place in June, and for its duration the surrounding area is filled with an international throng of businessmen. If you visit at this time you will find that the local cafés and restaurants are often full and hotel accommodation can be extremely hard to come by.

The symbol of the Trade Fair is a steel needle erected over the lower part of the Upper Silesian Tower in 1955, the main part having been destroyed during World War II. When the tower was built in 1911, to a design by Hans Poelzig, it was considered by admiring critics to be a masterpiece of modern architecture in reinforced concrete.

Poznań Cathedral

The first church, a pre-Romanesque basilica, was built in Poznań in 966, shortly after Poland adopted Christianity, and the first rulers of Poland were buried there. In 1034–8 the basilica was destroyed during pagan uprisings and the campaign of the Czech prince Brzetysław. It was then completely rebuilt in the Romanesque style. It was remodelled in the Gothic and Baroque periods, and after suffering war damage was restored to its earlier Gothic form. Vestiges of the pre-Romanesque and Romanesque churches can be seen in the crypt.

Ostrów Tumski Island

Ostrów Tumski Island is the oldest part of Poznań. In the 10th century it was the site of one of the first capital cities of the Polish state.

Today the island is dominated by the Gothic towers of the cathedral, which contains many fine works of art. Near the cathedral stands the small Gothic Church of St Mary (Kościół halowy NMP), which was built in the years 1431–48 for Bishop Andrzej Bniński by Hanusz Prusz, a pupil of the notable late medieval architect Heinrich Brunsberg.

Also of interest is the Lubrański Academy, the first institute of higher education to be established in Poznań. It was founded in 1518 by Bishop Jan Lubrański. Behind its inconspicuous façade lies a small arcaded Renaissance courtyard. The academy acquired its greatest renown in the early 16th century. One of its alumni was Jan Struś, a scientist and a prominent physician during the years of the Polish Renaissance.

In the gardens on the other side of Ulica ks. I. Podosadzego stand a number of canons' and vicars' houses which are charming in appearance – if a little neglected. One of them contains the collections of the Archdiocesan Museum.

The late Gothic Psalter, which was built in around

The remains of a 2,500-year-old Iron Age fortified settlement can be seen on an island in Lake Biskupinskie. The settlement was built entirely of wood and was inhabited for about 150 years by people of the Lusatian culture. It was surrounded by a stockade and a wall of earth and wood 6 m (18 ft) high. Access was over a bridge and through a gateway. The wall enclosed more than 100 houses built in 13 terraces, and the streets were paved with wood. The population was about 1,000.

When the water level rose, the lake flooded the houses and covered the settlement with a layer of silt, so that the site was abandoned. It was rediscovered in 1934 by a local teacher, Walenty Szwajcer. It is the earliest known settlement in Poland and one of the most interesting prehistoric sites in the whole of Europe.

Some of the buildings have been reconstructed and there are pens with small ponies, goats and sheep similar to those that the inhabitants would have raised. The annual Archaeology Gala features exhibitions – of Iron Age hairstyles and archery, for example – and workshops where artifacts are made by prehistoric methods.

Łukomski, Pompeo Ferrari designed a single interior space covered by a large dome rising to a height of 36 m (119 ft); the paintings by Georg Wilhelm Neuhertz depict the Church Fathers during the land seizures and give visual expression to the methods by which the Counter-Reformation would triumph in Poland: by teaching and persuasion rather than by militancy.

The 14th-century Gothic Cathedral of the Assumption (Archikatedra Wniebowzięcia NMP) stands on the site of two earlier churches. The first was a pre-Romanesque church built some time after 970, and the second a Romanesque church dating from the mid-11th century. When Princess Dąbrowka, wife of Mieszko I, was buried here in 977, Gniezno was the first capital of the Polonians. Its importance increased further when in 997 the relics of St Adalbert were laid in the church. From 1025 to the 14th century Poland's royal rulers were crowned in the cathedral.

Potocki Chapel

The chapel of Archbishop Teodor Potocki was built by Pompeo Ferrari in 1727–30. It is decorated with Baroque paintings by Matthias Johanness Mayer.

★ Tomb of Archbishop Zbigniew Oleśnicki

This tomb was carved in red marble by the late Gothic sculptor Veit Stoss in 1495.

★ Bronze Doors

The bronze doors of the cathedral, made in the late 12th century and depicting scenes from the life and martyrdom of St Adalbert, are among the finest examples of Romanesque art in Europe.

ST ADALBERT

St Adalbert (St Wojciech in Polish) was a bishop from Prague. In 977, at the suggestion of Bolesław the Brave, he left Poland for the heathen lands of Prussia, where he converted the inhabitants to Christianity but was martyred. Bolesław bought the saint's body from the Prussians, giving them in return its weight in gold, and laid the remains in Gniezno.

Pope Sylvester II acknowledged the bishop's martyrdom and canonized him.

In 1038, when the Czech prince Brzetysław invaded the city, the cathedral was sacked and the saint's relics taken to Prague.

Exploring Gniezno

Besides its magnificent cathedral, Gniezno has many historic buildings and fine museums, making for a pleasant walk around the city. Gniezno Archdiocesan Museum, next to the cathedral, contains religious artifacts, including paintings, sculpture, textiles and coffin portraits (see p29). A smart street leads off the Market Square to the Gothic Church of St John (Kościół św Jana), which has 14th-century murals. It is hard to imagine that this small town was once the capital of the Polish nation. The history of the city is told in the Museum of the Origins of the Polish State, in Piast Park. In the park are the remains of a late medieval fortified town.

Romanesque Architecture Tour 14

Romanesque column in Strzelno

Sadly, few buildings survive in Wielkopolska from the earliest days of the Polish nation in the 10th century. For hundreds of years most building in Poland was in wood, and more durable brick or stone architecture was rare. A tour of pre-Romanesque and Romanesque buildings in Wielkopolska might start at Gniezno, then take in Trzemeszno and Mogilno. The finest Romanesque architecture in Poland is to be found in Strzelno – examples are the Rotunda of St Procopius and the Church of the Holy Trinity, with its remarkable Romanesque pillars. Another town of interest is Kruszwica, setting for the legend of King Popiel and home to the “Mouse Tower” of that tale.

Trzemeszno ②

In the 12th century an order of Augustinian canons regular settled here on the site of a pre-Romanesque basilica and Benedictine monastery that had been demolished in 1038. In 1782–91 the church was rebuilt in the Baroque style.

Mogilno ③

The Benedictine church probably dates from the 11th century. After many phases of rebuilding it finally acquired a Baroque façade, although many Romanesque elements remain, in particular the crypt.

Gniezno ①

By the 14th century, Gniezno's Romanesque church had been replaced by a Gothic cathedral, but the bronze doors of the earlier building survive (see pp222–3).

Strzelno ④

The Rotunda of St Procopius in Strzelno dates from the turn of the 13th century. In the Church of the Holy Trinity 12th-century carvings, discovered in 1946, depict personifications of the virtues and vices of Christian tradition.

Lake Gopło ⑦

This narrow lake is surrounded mostly by marshy meadows. It is home to many birds, including bitterns, marsh harriers, lapwings and wild geese.

Inowrocław ③

The most historic building in this health resort is the Church of Our Lady, dating from the turn of the 13th century, built in the time of the dukes of Inowrocław.

TIPS FOR DRIVERS

Tour length: About 100 km (60 miles).

Stopping-off points: Every town mentioned has restaurants and cafés as well as accommodation available. There is a tourist hostel in Strzelno.

Kruszwica ⑥

Kruszwica was briefly the seat of a bishopric and the mid-12th-century Church of St Peter may well have been its cathedral. The shell and the interior of the church are built of granite ashlar, which remarkably survive almost in their original state.

THE LEGEND OF KING POPIEL

The legend of King Popiel was recorded in the early 12th century by Gall Anonim, the first Polish chronicler. According to the legend, Siemowit Piast, founder of the Piast dynasty, was a peasant from Kruszwica. The Poles, terrified by the atrocities committed by their king, Popiel, decided to depose him and chose Siemowit Piast as his successor. Popiel fled to his tower but the rebels turned into mice and devoured him. The Gothic tower overlooking Lake Gopło in Kruszwica is called the "Mouse Tower" but was in fact built in the 14th century, a few hundred years after these events were said to have taken place.

The castle at Gołuchów looks as if it belongs in the Loire Valley, in France, alongside the other Renaissance châteaux for which that region is celebrated. Although the castle at Gołuchów was built in the mid-16th to 17th centuries, its present exterior dates only from 1872–85, commissioned by the owners, Izabella Czartoryska and her husband, Jan Działyński. Izabella was the daughter of Adam Czartoryski, a Polish émigré leader in Paris, and was educated in France; her wish was to turn the residence into a “paradise on earth” according to her own tastes. She also built a museum that was open to the public. Initial plans for the renovation of the castle were made in around 1871 by the French architect Eugène Viollet-le-Duc. The rest of the castle was designed by his son-in-law, Maurice August Ouradou, after plans by Polish architects. Today the castle museum contains European and Oriental works of art from the collection of the Działyński family.

Kalisz, a settlement on the amber route between the Baltic Sea and Rome, has ancient origins. It is mentioned as Calisia by Ptolemy in his Geography of AD 142–7. However, a town did not grow up here until the 13th century, and it did not really develop until the 15th century, when Kalisz became a provincial capital. During the Partitions of Poland, Kalisz was the furthest outpost of the Russian empire. In 1914, just after the start of World War I, it was severely bombed by Prussian artillery. Its rebuilding began in 1917, and the present city centre, with town houses surrounding the Market Square, the town hall and the Bogusławski Theatre, dates from that time. A substantial number of earlier buildings survive. These include the Gothic Cathedral of St Nicholas (Katedra św Mikołaja), the late Baroque collegiate Church of the Assumption (Kościół Wniebowzięcia NMP), and the neighbouring Mannerist church, formerly a Jesuit college. The group of Bernadine monasteries and

When Duke Antoni Radziwiłł asked Karl Friedrich Schinkel to build him a hunting lodge, it was an unusual commission for the architect. The small larchwood building, dating from 1822–4, has a cruciform plan and an octagonal centre. The octagonal hall is surrounded by galleries supported by a large central pillar. It was here that, in 1827, Frédéric Chopin taught Wanda, Duke Radziwiłł's daughter, with whom he fell in love. Unfortunately, the piano on which the great composer played was chopped up for firewood by soldiers of the Red Army who were billeted in the lodge. It now houses a Centre for Culture and Art, and is the venue for concerts and festivals in honour of Chopin, as well as hunting balls.

The centre of the Polish textile industry, Łódź developed at an astonishing rate as the industry thrived. Its population grew from just 15,000 in 1850 to more than half a million in 1914. It was a place of great contrasts, which were vividly documented in the novel The Promised Land (1899) by the Nobel Prize-winning author Władysław Reymont. The contrasts can still be seen in the architecture of the city, where vast fortunes and abject poverty existed side by side. Factories and opulent mansions sprang up in their hundreds, contrasting with the ramshackle homes of the factory workers.

Exploring Łódź

The city's main thoroughfare is Ulica Piotrkowska, which is several kilometres long. Its most important section stretches from Plac Wolności to Aleje Piłsudskiego. It is Poland's longest pedestrianized street and is lined with shops, cafés, restaurants and banks.

Behind the town houses, the brick factory buildings still stand, many of them now converted into stores. A noteworthy example is the one at Piotrkowska 137/139, built in 1907 for the cotton manufacturer Juliusz Kindermann by the architect Gustav Landau-Gutenteger, and featuring a gold mosaic frieze depicting an allegory of trade. In Plac Wolności is

The city's cemeteries – the Catholic and Protestant cemeteries in Ulica Srebrzyńska and the Jewish cemetery in Ulica Bracka – contain some exceptionally interesting monuments that bear witness to the variety of cultures and nationalities that existed in Łódź before 1939, when it was a city with one of the largest Jewish populations in Europe. The grand mausoleums were built for local industrialists, who before 1914 were the wealthiest people in the Russian empire.

In Tum, 3 km (2 miles) from Łęczycza, is the best-preserved Romanesque church of significant size in Poland. This granite building, consecrated in 1161, was remodelled several times, but its current form is close to its original one. The west apse has a remarkable Romanesque fresco of Christ in Glory, painted in 1161.

Gdańsk is among the finest cities of northern Europe, distinguished by beautiful buildings and a history that stretches back more than 1,000 years. For many centuries the wealthiest city in Poland, it was in 1939 the place where the first shots of World War II were fired. The end of the conflict brought destruction, but Gdańsk recovered as settlers moved in from other parts of Poland.

The earliest mention of Gdańsk occurs in 997. For more than 300 years it was the capital of a Slav duchy in Pomerania, and in 1308 it was taken over by the Teutonic Knights.

Under their rule, the city grew.

In 1361 Gdańsk became a member of the Hanseatic League (a trade association of Baltic towns), further bolstering its economic development. From 1466 until the Second Partition in 1793, the city belonged to Poland; it was the country's largest Baltic port and an important centre of the grain and timber trade between Poland and the rest of Europe.

A wealthy city, Gdańsk played a pivotal role in the Polish Republic (see p42). It also became a major centre of the arts – goldsmiths fashioned fine jewellery for the royal courts of Europe, and the city's gemstone and amber workshops won great renown.

From 1793 it was incorporated into Prussia, only becoming a free city under the Treaty of Versailles after World War I. It was almost totally destroyed during World War II, but a post-war rebuilding programme has restored many of the city's finest buildings and much of its historic atmosphere.

Today Gdańsk, attractively set between the coast and wooded hills, is renowned for its mercantile traditions and its openness to the world. Together with the coastal resort of Sopot and the port of Gdynia (see p263), it forms the conurbation known as Trójmiasto ("the Tri-city").

View of the main town of Gdańsk

Exploring Gdańsk

The most important buildings in terms of the history of Gdańsk are to be found in the city centre, which can be reached by taking a bus or tram to the Main Station (Dworzec Główny), the Highland Gate (Brama Wyzyczna) or the Podwale Przedmiejskie, and continuing on foot from there. The bus, tram or urban railway (SKM) are all useful for travelling to outlying parts of the city. You can also take the SKM to reach Oliwa in the northwest, which has a fine group of cathedral buildings, one of which contains a famous organ, and a good park for walking.

GETTING THERE

Gdańsk has good transport links. There are rail services to and from all the major cities in Poland – the express train from Warsaw takes just over 4 hours. There is an international airport at Rębiechowo, near Gdańsk. It is also easy to reach Gdańsk by car, whether from Warsaw (route E77), central Poland (route E75), Szczecin (route E28) or Berlin (route E22).

Street-by-Street: Along Raduna Canal

Despite wartime destruction, some fine buildings have survived on either side of the Raduna Canal. It was dug in about 1338, one of the greatest projects undertaken by the Teutonic Knights in Gdańsk, and for many centuries it was of great importance to the city's economy. The current in the canal was used to supply power for local mills, grindstones and a sawmill. Among the buildings look out for the Mannerist-style House of the Abbots of Pelplin, the Great Mill, which dates from the rule of the Teutonic Knights, and the enormous churches of St Catherine and St Bridget.

The Church of St Elizabeth was built in 1417 beside a leprosorium, or lepers' sanctuary.

The Church of St Joseph is a former Carmelite church, built in 1482. After the devastation of World War II, it was rebuilt by the Church Fathers.

The monument was built a few months after the famous Gdańsk Shipyard workers' strike of 1980 and the creation of the independent Solidarity trade union (see p53). It was erected in honour of the shipyard workers who were killed during the strike and demonstrations of December 1970; it stands 30 m (100 ft) from the spot where the first three victims fell. Its three stainless steel crosses, 42 m (130 ft) high, were both a warning that such a tragedy might happen again and a symbol of remembrance and hope.

The monument was designed by the shipyard workers and a group of artists including Bogdan Pietruszka, Wiesław Szyślak, Robert Pepliński and Elżbieta Szczodrowska. It was built by a team of workers from the shipyard. In the 1980s, the cross was the rallying point for Solidarity demonstrations, which were suppressed by the police.

Built by Antonis van Opbergen in 1587–95, the Old Town Hall in Gdańsk is an outstanding example of Dutch Mannerist architecture.

It is a compact, plain building with no distinctive ornamentation, and is equipped with a defence tower. The stone doorway was probably made by Willem van der Meer. Beneath each bracket are two distorted masks personifying vice, and two smiling, chubby masks, personifying virtue. Within the town hall, the painting, sculpture and furniture are very interesting, although little is left of the original decorative scheme of 1595. Of particular interest is the painted ceiling in one of the rooms which is by Hermann Hahn, a 17th-century Pomeranian artist. It was removed from a house at Ulica Długa 39 and transferred to the Old

GDAŃSK SHIPYARD

The Gdańsk Shipyard is known throughout the world as the birthplace of Solidarity (see p53). In December 1970, a shipyard workers' strike and protests in the city were crushed by the authorities. The next strike, in 1980, led to the establishment of the Independent Solidarity Trade Union. The strike leader was Lech Wałęsa, who was to become President of Poland (1990–5). Since 1989, in free market conditions, the shipyard has proved commercially unviable.

The Great Mill (Wielki Młyn) was one of the largest industrial buildings in medieval Europe. It was constructed during the rule of the Teutonic Knights, being completed in around 1350. It is built in brick and is crowned by a tall, steeply pitched roof.

At the front of the building stood a two-storey bakery with a chimney set against the gable of the mill which reached the height of its roof. Beside the mill stood 12, later 18, large poles to which millstones were attached for grinding various types of grain. The mill was destroyed by fire in 1945, but was restored after World War II. This remarkable old building now contains a modern shopping centre.

The Church of St Catherine (Kościół św Katarzyny) is the oldest and also the most important parish church in the old town. It was built in 1227–39 by the dukes of Gdańsk-Pomerania and underwent major rebuilding in the 14th century.

Most of the Gothic, Mannerist and Baroque furnishings that the church once contained were pillaged or destroyed in 1945. The most notable surviving pieces are the paintings by Anton Möller and Izaak van den Blocke, the Baroque memorials to various townspeople and the tombstone of the astronomer Johannes Hevelius, dating from 1659.

The tower, 76 m (250 ft) high, was first built in 1486. Demolished in 1944 and later rebuilt, it is once again a major landmark. It is well worth climbing to the top of the tower; the effort is rewarded by wonderful views of the city. The presbytery on the east side of the church has a fine late Gothic gable.

The Church of St Bridget (Kościół św Brygidy) was well known in Poland in the 1980s as a place of worship and sanctuary for members of Solidarity. It was built on the site of a 14th-century chapel dedicated to St Mary Magdalene, where in 1374 the remains of the visionary St Bridget were displayed as they were being taken from Rome to Vadstena in Sweden. Soon afterwards a monastery for the Sisters of St Bridget was founded here. The church built beside it was completed in around 1514.

The brick shell of the Gothic church contrasts with the more recent belfry, built in 1653 by Peter Willer. The church's stark interior is an effective foil for the modern altars, tombstones and sculptures that it now contains. The most impressive of these are the high altar and the monument to Father Jerzy Popiełuszko, who was murdered in 1984 by Polish security service officials.

The Polish Post Office was the scene of some of the most dramatic events of the first days of World War II. At daybreak on 1 September 1939, German troops attacked the Polish Postal Administration that had its base here, in what was then the free city of Gdańsk. For 15 hours the postal workers resisted the onslaught, but they were finally overwhelmed. On 5 October more than 30 of them were executed by Nazi soldiers at the Zaspa Cemetery. Their heroism is commemorated in the Post Office Museum and by a monument depicting an injured postal worker atop scattered mail, handing over his rifle to Nike, Greek goddess of victory. It was designed by Wincenty Kućma in 1979 and bears an epitaph written by Maria and Zygfryd Korpalski in 1979.

The Gdańsk crane (Żuraw), icon of the city, is one of its finest buildings and a medieval structure almost unique in Europe. Built in the 14th century and renovated in 1442–4, when it acquired its present appearance, it combined the functions of a city gate and a port crane.

The crane, an entirely wooden structure, is set between two circular brick towers. It was operated by men working the huge treadmills within, and was capable of lifting weights of up to 2 tonnes to a height of 27 m (90 ft). The crane was used not only to load and unload goods but also in fitting masts to ships.

The crane was destroyed by fire in 1945. As part of the rebuilding programme after World War II it was repaired and reconstructed, together with its internal mechanism. It is now part of the collection of the Central Maritime Museum (see p245). The Crane Tower looks out over Ulica Długie Pobrzeże, which runs alongside the River Motława. Once known as the Long Bridge, it was originally a wooden footbridge that functioned as a quay where ships from all over the world tied up. Today a fleet of yachts and small pleasure boats offering trips around the harbour in the Port of Gdańsk is moored here.

Ulica Mariacka 8

Ulica Mariacka, regarded as Gdańsk's finest street, runs eastwards from the Church of St Mary to Długie Pobrzeże, terminating at the Mariacka Gate on the riverfront. Rebuilt from the ruins that resulted from World War II, the street contains outstanding examples of traditional Gdańsk architecture. Here, town houses that were once owned by wealthy merchants and goldsmiths have tall, richly ornamented façades; others are fronted by external raised terraces with ornamented parapets. It is small wonder that this picturesque street has for centuries inspired writers and artists.

The neighbourly porch gossip that once upon a time filled the evening air is sadly no more. Today, however, the street is a favourite haunt of lovers as well as tourists, most of whom are looking for picturesque subjects to photograph or browsing through the amber jewellery for which Ulica Mariacka is now celebrated. During the long summer evenings, a number of musicians provide free open-air concerts, and the welcoming street cafés stay open until late at night.

Church of St Mary 9

The Church of St Mary (Kościół Mariacki) is the largest medieval brick church in Europe. Building work began in 1343 and took 150 years to complete. The final stage of construction, involving the 100-m (325-ft) long nave, was carried out by Henryk Hetzel. From 1529 to 1945, when it was destroyed, St Mary's was a Protestant church. Like so many other parts of Gdańsk, it was rebuilt after World War II. The interior contains furnishings in the Gothic, Mannerist and Baroque styles. Look out for the memorial tablets to prominent local families.

This ornate panel, made by Anton Möller in 1607, once hung over the church collection box. Its purpose was to encourage churchgoers to be generous.

Street-by-Street: Długi Targ and Długa

Długi Targ and Ulica Długa, its continuation, are the most attractive streets in Gdańsk. Długi Targ leads westwards from the Green Gate on the River Motława to join Ulica Długa, which runs as far as the Golden Gate. These two pedestrianized streets are lined with old town houses that were once the residences of the city's wealthiest citizens. Most of the Main City's principal buildings, including the town hall and Artus Court, are on Długi Targ. Together the streets formed an avenue that was used for parades, ceremonies and sometimes public executions and from 1457 for the processions that accompanied royal visits – which is why the two streets were known as the Royal Way.

Highland Gate 12

ul. Wały Jagiellońskie.

The Highland Gate marks the beginning of the Royal Way that, following Ulica Długa and Długi Targ, descends eastwards to the Green Gate (see p240). It was built by Hans Kramer of Saxony as part of the fortifications that were erected along the western limits of the city in 1571–6. Originally built in brick, the gate acquired its present appearance in 1588, when the Flemish architect Willem van den Blocke faced it with stone on its western side, making it look as if it were made of masonry blocks.

The upper level is decorated with cartouches containing coats of arms: that of Poland, held by two angels (on the breast of the eagle the coat of arms of Stanisław August, a bull calf, is visible) are flanked by the Prussian coat of arms, borne by unicorns, and those of Gdańsk, borne by lions.

ul. Długa–Przedbramie. Tel 058 301 49 45. to the public.

The mix of architectural styles in the Prison Tower is the result of several rebuildings. The tower was originally built as part of the now-destroyed Ulica Długa Gate that was erected in the second half of the 14th century as part of the medieval fortifications of the Main Town.

In the 15th and 16th centuries, the tower was heightened several times and the surrounding buildings altered accordingly. When the new fortifications were built in 1571–6 the entire complex lost its purpose. It began to be used as a prison, court and torture chamber.

It was remodelled for its new purpose in 1604 by Antonis van Opbergen, who gave it a northern Mannerist form, and by Willem van der Meer, who added decorative detail. The tower was the scene of many blood-curdling interrogations. There is a whipping post on the western wall, which was also the site of many executions. At the turn of the 20th century, in accordance with the new functions of the buildings, a stonemason's workshop was installed in the courtyard.

The Amber Museum is due to open in the Prison Tower in the near future.

Golden Gate 14

ul. Długa.

The Golden Gate was built in 1612–14 on the site of the medieval Ulica Długa Gate. The architect, Abraham van den Blocke, devised the new construction in the style of a classical Roman triumphal arch through which the Royal Way would enter the city of Gdańsk.

The arches of the gate are framed by Ionic columns in the lower tier surmounted by composite columns in the upper tier. The gate is crowned with statues carved by Piotr Ringier in 1648 and reconstructed after the originals were damaged in World War II. The statues on the outer side of the gate, facing away from the city, depict peace, freedom, prosperity and glory, while those on the inner side, facing the city, represent prudence, piety, justice and harmony. The carved decoration is complemented by inscriptions in both Latin and German on the theme of civic virtue. The whole gate was designed and constructed in the Neo-Classical style but with Mannerist elements.

The fraternity of St George, an association of archers and the oldest of its kind in medieval Gdańsk, originally met in Artus Court. However, in 1487 the fraternity acquired its own premises, St George's Court, which was built under the direction of Hans Glothau in the Flemish style. It was completed in 1494.

The first floor contained an archery range and storerooms for archery equipment. Members of the fraternity met in the Great Hall on the first floor. The hall was also used for ceremonies, meetings and banquets and for the performance of plays.

In 1566 it was crowned by a figure of St George and the Dragon, which was removed and is now on display in the National Museum (the figure on the small tower is a copy). In the 19th century the building housed the School of Fine Art. Today Artus Court is the premises of the Gdańsk branch of the Association of Polish Architects.

Looking down Ulica Długa from the Golden Gate to Długi Targ

Ulica Długa 16

Today, as in the past, Ulica Długa ("Long Street") is the Main Town's principal thoroughfare. The houses that line the street were once inhabited by the foremost burghers of Gdańsk, and virtually every one has its own colourful history. Although the oldest surviving houses on the street date from the Middle Ages, most were built during the heyday of the Hanseatic League.

With their narrow façades crowned by a variety of elements – from coats of arms and symbols to animals, allegorical figures and the heroes of classical mythology – the houses on Ulica Długa are typical of the architecture of Gdańsk. Unfortunately when they were modernized in the mid-19th century, all the stepped terraces that originally fronted the entrances to the houses were removed.

After the carnage of World War II, almost every building on Ulica Długa was left in ruins. Many of the houses were later reconstructed, but only the finest buildings were rebuilt in architectural detail.

The house that originally stood at Ulica Długa 12 was acquired by Johann Uphagen, a town councillor, in 1775. He had it demolished, and a new residence was built in its place. The architect, Johann Benjamin Dreyer, completed the project in 1787. The result was an attractive building combining Baroque, Rococo and early Neo-Classical features.

The sole ornamentation of the restrained façade is the Rococo decoration to the door, which is inscribed with the initial A, for Abigail, the owner's wife. The interiors, featuring Rococo and Neo-Classical elements, are splendid.

The city's first town hall was built after 1298 on the orders of Świętopełk II, Duke of Gdańsk-Pomerania. It functioned as an office of the Hanseatic League.

Work on the current building was begun in 1327. An elegant tower was added in 1486–8, during one of several phases of rebuilding. After a fire in 1556, this Gothic town hall was remodelled in the Mannerist style. The interior was lavishly decorated in 1593–1608 by the most prominent painters and craftsmen of the day, including Hans Vredeman de Vries, Izaak van den Blocke and Simon Herle. Their combined genius produced one of the finest town halls in all of northern Europe, proof of the city's wealth and power. It also served as a royal residence.

The highlight of the town hall is without doubt the Red Room, which was once the Great Council Chamber. The Renaissance fireplace is by Willem van der Meer and the centrepiece of the ceiling paintings is the Apotheosis of Gdańsk by Izaak van den Blocke. After being destroyed in 1945, the town hall was rebuilt and many of its furnishings reconstructed. It now houses the Museum of the History of Gdańsk.

Długi Targ 19

Długi Targ, a broad short street that runs on from Ulica Długa and terminates at the Green Gate on the River Motława, is the final part of the Royal Way leading from the Golden Gate through to the city centre. It also functioned as a marketplace as well as a site for the public execution of aristocratic prisoners. The townhouses on Długi Targ, like those elsewhere in the old town, were destroyed in 1945 but have been restored. Today the square is filled with souvenir shops. Its focal point is the Fountain of Neptune, which was installed outside Artus Court in 1633.

in the cities of the Hanseatic League. Visitors to the court came to discuss the issues of the day and to enjoy the fine beer that was served there in unlimited quantities. The first Artus Court in Gdańsk was established in the 14th century, but the original building was destroyed by fire in 1477. The present building opened in 1481. Its rear elevation preserves the building's original Gothic style, but the façade was twice rebuilt, first in 1552 and again in 1616–17 by Abraham van den Blocke. The interior furnishings were renewed several times, funded mainly by individual fraternities, who would gather for meetings seated on benches along the walls of the court. Despite wartime destruction, reconstruction has succeeded in recreating something of the court's historic atmosphere. A highlight of the interior is the intricately decorated 16th-century Renaissance tiled stove, 12 m (40 ft) high.

The Golden House, also known as Speimann House or Steffens House after its owners, was built in 1609–18 for Jan Speimann, mayor of Gdańsk and a wealthy merchant and patron of the arts, and his wife Maria Judyta.

The architect was Abraham van den Blocke, who also executed some of the stone carving. The most impressive feature of the house is its façade, which is covered in intricate gilt carvings, and which fortunately escaped the fires that ravaged the building in 1945.

Today the building houses the Maritime Institute. Local people claim that it is haunted; in one of the corridors the shining figure of the former lady of the house, Maria Judyta Speimann, is said to appear and can be heard whispering the words "A just deed fears no man".

Green Gate 22

ul. Długi Targ 24. to the public.

With its pinnacled roof and elaborate decorative stonework, the Green Gate hardly resembles the usual city gate – it is more like a mansion. There is good reason for this, because the gate was intended to serve as a residence for visiting royalty. In the event it was used in this way only once – when Maria Louisa Gonzaga arrived in Gdańsk from France in order to marry Władysław IV in 1646.

The gate was designed in the Mannerist style by the architect Johann Kramer from Dresden, and built in 1564–8 by Regnier from Amsterdam. Its windows provide a magnificent view of Ulica Długi Targ and the town hall in one direction, and the River Motława and Spichlerze Island in the other.

Once joined to the mainland, Spichlerze Island was created when the New Motława Canal was dug in 1576. A centre of trade developed here at the end of the 13th century. What was then a relatively small number of granaries had grown to more than 300 by the 16th century. Each granary had a name and each façade was decorated with an individual emblem. The purpose of digging the canal, and thus of surrounding the district with water, was not only to protect the granaries against fire but also to safeguard their contents against thieves.

Everything was destroyed in 1945. Today a main road bisects the island, and the charred stumps that can still be seen in many places are all that remain of the granaries. The name signs on some ruins – such as Arche Noah (“Noah’s Ark”) on Ulica Żytnia (“Wheat Street”) – remain legible. Reconstruction began several years ago. The first granaries to be rebuilt were those between the Motława and Ulica Chmielna (“Hop Street”). One of them is now the headquarters of ZUS, the Polish social security organization. Restoration of a group of buildings on Ulica Stągiewna was completed in 1999. Two 16th-century Gothic castle keeps, survivors of World War II, are in this street. They are known as the Stągwie Mleczne (“Milk Churns”).

The imposing Church of the Holy Trinity (Kościół św Trójcy) was built by Franciscan monks in 1420–1514. In 1480, the Chapel of St Anne was constructed alongside the church.

Protestantism quickly spread to Gdańsk, and one of its most ardent proponents in the region was the Franciscan friar Alexander Svenichen. When congregations declined because of Svenichen’s activities, the Franciscans decided in 1556 to hand the monastery over to the city as a theological college. The head of the Franciscan order did not agree with the Gdańsk friars’ decision to cede the monastery but the order’s petitions to the Polish kings to have the property returned bore no result. As a result, the church was transferred to the Protestants. The grammar school that was established here later became the widely celebrated Academic Grammar School. It also came to house the first library in Gdańsk. However, centuries later in 1945 it was returned to the Catholics, after the violence of World War II had reduced it to a ruin.

The aisled church has a distinctive exterior with ornamental Gothic spires. They crown the elongated presbytery, the façade and the walls of the adjacent Chapel of St Anne. The presbytery, which was occupied by the friars, was separated from the aisles by a wall. Interesting features of the interior are the many tombstones that are set into the floor and the numerous works by Gdańsk artists. The very fine Gothic stalls were made by local craftsmen in 1510–11. Their carved decorations depict a wide variety of subjects, among them animals including a monkey, a lion fighting a dragon and several birds.

The church contains the oldest surviving pulpit in Gdańsk – it dates from 1541 and is another remarkable example of local wood carving. In the north aisle can be seen the marble tomb made by Abraham van den Blocke in 1597 for Giovanni Bernardo Bonifacio, Marquis d’Orii, a restless spirit and champion of the Reformation who founded the Gdańsk library. “Bones long since thrown ashore here finally rest from their earthly wanderings” reads the poetic Latin inscription.

Beside the church is a half-timbered galleried house dating from the 17th century.

National Museum 26

The National Museum is laid out mainly in a former Gothic Franciscan monastery of 1422–1522. It contains a wealth of artifacts, from wrought-iron grilles to sculpture and painting. The museum's most prized piece is The Last Judgement by the Flemish painter Hans Memling (c.1430–94). In 1473, it was plundered by privateers from Gdańsk from a ship bound for Italy.

Oliwa, a district to the northwest of Gdańsk, was once the base of wealthy Cistercians, who built a cathedral and monastery here. The present cathedral, built in the 14th century in the Gothic style, replaced the original 13th-century Romanesque church that was destroyed by fire in 1350. While the exterior has survived without major alteration, the interior has been redecorated in the Baroque style. Its famous organ can be heard in recitals. The German battleship Schleswig Holstein opened fire on Polish ammunition dumps in the Free City of Gdańsk. The Germans expected the capture of the Westerplatte to take a matter of hours, but the 182-man garrison under Major Henryk Sucharski resisted for seven days, their heroism becoming a symbol of Polish resistance in the struggle against the Nazi invasion.

Today ruined barracks and concrete bunkers, together with a huge Monument to the Defenders of Westerplatte unveiled in 1966, bear witness to that struggle.

Fortifications were first built on this strategic point at the mouth of the River Vistula in the time of the Teutonic Knights. Work on the construction of a brick tower began in 1482. From here, a duty was levied on passing ships using a simple enforcement method that was impossible to avoid – a chain was stretched across the river, preventing the ship's passage, and released only when the captain had made the required payment. Equipped with a brazier in which a fire was lit, the tower was also used as a lighthouse.

In 1562–3 the tower was surrounded by a system of defences, and afterwards was repeatedly fortified and refortified as military technology advanced. In 1586–7 the entire complex was reinforced by four bastions, designed by Antonis van Opbergen and Jan Strakowski, and an outer moat was added. This was followed by the addition of a ditch in 1624–6. Also in the 17th century, 15 tall barrack buildings were added around the now-ageing tower.

Over the following years, constant building, often by prominent fortification engineers of the time, steadily enlarged the fortress. It withstood several sieges and was often used to accommodate visiting royalty.

POMERANIA

Beautiful beaches and the resorts of the Baltic are Pomerania's main attractions, which every summer draw large numbers of holiday-makers in search of sand and sun. A less crowded but equally attractive aspect of the region are the Drawsko Lakes and the alpine scenery of Szawcacia Kaszubska, west of Gdańsk.

Polish Pomerania is divided into the two regions of Western and Eastern Pomerania, each with an ethnically diverse population. The border between the two regions is in the districts of Bytów and Lębork.

Christianity was introduced to Western Pomerania by Bishop Otto of Bamberg, who founded a bishopric in Wolin in 1140. The Duchy of Pomerania, established in the 12th century, maintained its independence for several centuries and secured its economic development through the strength of its port cities, which were part of the Hanseatic League. The Thirty Years' War (1618–48) and the death of the last duke of the Gryfici dynasty brought this independence to an end. Most of Western Pomerania came under the rule of Brandenburg, while Szczecin and the surrounding area was engulfed by Sweden until 1713. In the 18th and 19th centuries, Western Pomerania became first Prussian, then German, territory. It was returned to Poland in 1945.

Eastern Pomerania was Christianized in the 10th century. Although it originally belonged to Poland, it became an independent duchy from the 12th century. Overrun by the Teutonic Knights in 1306, it then enjoyed strong economic development. In 1466, after the Second Peace of Toruń, areas of Eastern Pomerania, including Royal Prussia, were ceded to Poland. However, during the Partitions of Poland (see p46), Eastern Pomerania became part of Prussia. It was finally returned to Poland in 1919. Gdańsk was given the status of a free city and only became part of Poland in 1945.

Pomerania's landscape was formed by the movement of glaciers. Its hilly countryside with small, clear lakes and its varied Baltic coastline make the region outstandingly beautiful.

Exploring Pomerania

Pomerania is one of Poland's most attractive regions, and in summer resorts such as Międzyzdroje, Kołobrzeg, Ustka, Łeba and Sopot teem with sunbathers and watersports enthusiasts. The most popular holiday spots are on the Hel Peninsula, where swimmers can choose between the open waters of the Baltic Sea or the calm of the Gulf of Gdańsk. For sightseeing at a slower pace there are the villages of Kashubia. The shady, tree-lined lanes in the region of Słupsk and Koszalin make for enjoyable cycle tours, while the clean rivers are attractive for canoeing. Those with an interest in history will not be disappointed with the great variety of historic buildings, from castles and cathedrals to small village churches and the stately houses of old seaside resorts.

GETTING AROUND

Szczecin and Gdańsk can be reached by air (see pp352–3). The best way to tour Pomerania is by car. The E28 connects Gdańsk with Słupsk, Koszalin and Szczecin. Parallel to it but further to the south is route 22, which is part of the old German A1 from Berlin to Kaliningrad (Królewiec). The E75 goes south from Gdańsk to Gniew. All larger towns and cities have rail links. In the Gulf of Gdańsk there are also ferries to Sopot and Hel.

Szczecin ❶

Szczecin, on the river Odra, is a major port even though it is more than 65 km (40 miles) from the sea. It serves both ocean-going vessels and river traffic, and is linked with Berlin by the Odra and by canals. A castle and a fishing village existed here in the 9th century. Szczecin was granted a municipal charter in 1243 and soon after it joined the Hanseatic League. It became the capital of a Pomeranian duchy and in 1673–1713 was overrun by the Swedes. Under Prussian rule it became a major port. The city suffered severely during World War II; post-war restoration has been confined to its more important buildings.

The Castle of the Dukes of Pomerania, rebuilt in the Renaissance style

Exploring Szczecin

The old town of Szczecin is picturesquely laid out on a steep escarpment. The large Castle of the Dukes of Pomerania was founded in the mid-13th century and was rebuilt in the Renaissance style by Guglielmo di Zaccharia in 1575–7. It consists of five wings, with two interior courtyards and two towers. The east wing dates from the 17th century. After damage suffered during World War II, the castle was almost completely rebuilt and its once-magnificent interior re-created. The basement of the east wing houses the Castle Museum. In a Baroque building near the castle is the main section of the National Museum. From the castle balcony overlooking the Odra, the Tower of the Seven Cloaks, the only remaining part of the city's medieval fortifications, can be seen.

Across the road is the Gate of Prussian Homage, formerly the Royal Gate, one of a pair that was built under Swedish rule in 1726–8. The architect was Gerhard Cornelius de Wallrawe, and the sculptor Berhold Damart. North of the castle is the red-brick late Gothic Church of Saints Peter and Paul (Kościół św św Piotra i Pawła), while further along the banks of the Odra is Ulica Waly Chrobrego. This boulevard, an impressive municipal project of 1902–13, was known in German times as the Hakenterrasse

The Gate of Prussian Homage, once known as the Royal Gate

(“Haken’s Terrace”) in honour of the mayor who initiated it. One of the buildings on the boulevard houses the Maritime Museum. From the terraces, with their decorative pavilions and a statue of Hercules Fighting the Centaur by Ludwig Manzel, there is a fine view of the harbour below.

North of the castle stands Loitz House, a sumptuous late Gothic town house built for the Loitz banking family in 1547. Further down, among the newly built townhouses in the old style, is the mainly 15th-century Baroque town hall. It houses the Szczecin History Museum. The Cathedral of St James (Katedra św Jakuba) was also rebuilt after almost complete wartime destruction; only the presbytery and west tower survived the bombing. It was originally erected in stages from the late 13th to the 15th centuries, with the involvement of the architect Heinrich Brunsberg. The cathedral has several Gothic altars originating from other churches in Pomerania. From the cathedral it is possible to walk southwards towards the Gothic Church of St John (Kościół św Jana), founded by the Franciscans, or to wander through the part of the city stretching out to the west that was built in the late 19th century. Many town houses and villas in a variety of styles have been preserved here, and the area has numerous bars and restaurants.

Around Wolin ②

Wolin's forests, deserted sandy beaches and picturesque, sometimes dramatic, coastal cliffs delight walkers and inspire photographers. Wolin also has plenty to offer those with an interest in historic buildings – the cathedral in Kamień Pomorski is one of the finest in Poland.

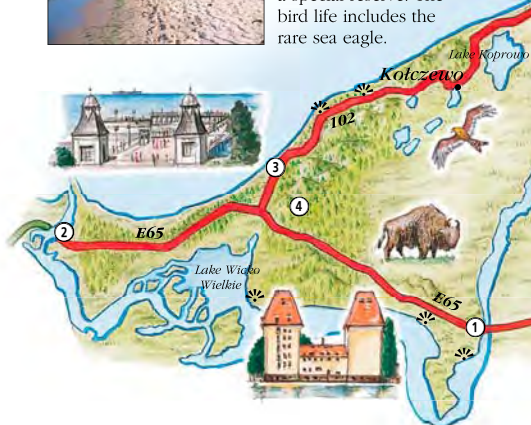

Wolin National Park ④

Apart from its beaches and lakes, the park is known for its bison, which can be seen in a special reserve. The bird life includes the rare sea eagle.

Międzyzdroje ③

This renowned health resort was created in 1830. It has a seafront promenade and a pier from which the cliffs can be admired. It is also a good base for hiking in Wolin National Park.

Świnoujście ②

The town straddles Poland's two islands – Wolin and Uznam. The only way of moving between the two parts of the town is by ferry. It has a large port, wide beaches and the elegant buildings of a coastal resort.

With its own port in the Szczecin Lagoon at the mouth of the River Ina, Stargard Szczeciński once rivalled Szczecin as a merchant town of the Hanseatic League.

Almost three quarters of the old town was destroyed during World War II, although the Gothic defensive walls with their towers and gates survived. The town's finest building is the Gothic Church of St Mary (Kościół Mariacki), which was founded in the late 13th century but only given its present appearance by Heinrich Brunsberg in the mid-15th century. The rich decoration of glazed and moulded brick is quite striking. The magnificent town hall, built in the 16th century and then remodelled in 1638, has a gable with intricate tracery. A particularly pleasant way

The fine sandy beaches of Kołobrzeg make it one of the most popular health resorts on the Baltic coast. It has a full complement of hotels, sanatoria, holiday homes and fried-fish stalls, but it is also a working fishing port. In the past it was a fortified coastal town of strategic significance. In summer the long promenade, leading to the lighthouse, is crowded with holiday-makers. The brick-built Cathedral of the Virgin Mary (Katedra NMP) was begun in 1525 and later altered and extended.

Among the remarkable objects it contains is a chandelier made by Johann Apenghether of Lübeck in 1327 depicting the Virgin and St John the Baptist. The Neo-Gothic town hall was built by the Berlin architect Karl Friedrich Schinkel in 1829–32. It is surrounded by alleys lined with old houses. The fortress, now in ruins, was unsuccessfully besieged by Napoleon's troops in 1807.

Darłowo, set 2.5 km (1½ miles) inland on the banks of the River Wieprza, is one of the most attractive towns of coastal Pomerania. In summer the waterfront district swarms with tourists and the fish stalls do a brisk trade, but the town's real charm lies in its old riverside district, where there are many historic buildings. The most prominent of these is the Gothic Castle of the Dukes of Pomerania. Founded in the 14th century, it was rebuilt several times and partially demolished in the 19th century; its surviving parts now house a museum.

The castle is associated with Erik of Pomerania, the warlike Duke of Słupsk, whose royal blood enabled him, in 1397, to hold the thrones of Denmark, Sweden and Norway. His turbulent rule was marked by constant warfare. He was finally deposed and returned to Darłowo, where he established the Duchy of Słupsk, crowning himself and, as Erik I, retaining his rule over Gotland. He was buried in the Church of St Mary (Kościół Mariacki), and his sarcophagus, made in 1888, can be seen here in the sepulchral chapel. Erik may also have been the founder of the late Gothic Chapel of St Gertrude (Kaplica św Gertrudy) on Ulica Tynickiego, an unusual twelve-sided building.

From 1368 to 1648, this town on the River Słupia was the capital of the Duchy of Western Pomerania. The Renaissance ducal castle was built by Antonio Guglielmo di Zaccharia in 1580–87. Today it is the Museum of Central Pomerania, which, besides items of local interest, has the country's largest collection of portraits by the painter and writer Stanisław Ignacy Witkiewicz (1885–1939), better known as Witkacy.

The watermill opposite the castle, dating from about 1310, is one of the oldest in Poland. Now a branch of the museum, it houses an ethnographical collection. In the Dominican Church of St Hyacinthus (Kościół św Jacka) nearby are the black marble and alabaster tombs of Bogusław de Croy, the last of the dukes of Pomerania, and his mother, the Duchess Anna de Croy. They were carved by Kasper Gockhaller of Gdańsk in 1682. The 14th-century Church of St Mary (Kościół Mariacki) is also of interest.

Słowiński National Park is renowned for its large, shifting sand dunes, which move at a rate of about 9 m (30 ft) a year, leaving the stumps of dead trees behind them. The area was once a gulf, of which the glacial lakes Łebsko and Gardno are vestiges. The park, a World Biosphere Reserve, is a haven for wild birds; more than 250 species, including the rare sea eagle, are found here.

The park's highest point, Rowokół, offers a fine view of the dunescape. At its foot is the village of Smółdzino, with a small Baroque church founded by Duchess Anna de Croy in the 17th century.

In the hamlet of Kluki, on Lake Łebsko, is a skansen dedicated to the ancient local Słowinian culture. Fishing equipment and agricultural implements are exhibited in the farmsteads. An electric train runs to the park from Rąbka, near the resort of Łeba. The town of Nowećin, also near Łeba, has a Neo-Gothic palace built for the Wejher family in 1909. It now houses a hotel and restaurant.

Bytów, with nearby Łębork, was the westernmost outpost of the territory held by the Teutonic Knights. The town, which after its conquest in 1466 was established as a Polish fiefdom, was ruled by the dukes of Pomerania, and later by Brandenburg and Prussia. It has been part of Poland since 1945.

Few of Bytów's historic buildings survive. The most interesting is the castle of the Teutonic Knights, which was built in 1390–1405 and was one of the first castles in Europe to be adapted for the use of firearms. It has four circular corner towers and a

The narrow Hel Peninsula is about 34 km (22 miles) long and in width ranges from just 200 m (650 ft) to 3 km (2 miles). It is made up of sandbanks formed by sea currents; in the 18th century it was no more than a chain of islets. The peninsula is now the Nadmorski Park Krajobrazowy, an area of outstanding natural beauty. When the railway line to Hel was completed in 1922, resorts began to spring up on the peninsula. Their main attraction was the double beach – one part facing the sea, the other the Gulf of Gdańsk. At the base of the peninsula is the town of Władysławowo, named after Władysław IV, who founded a now-vanished fortress here. Today the town's boundaries embrace many resorts, such as Jastrzębia Góra, Cetniewo and Chałupy. Jastarnia is the most popular resort, as it still retains many of its original fishermen's cottages. The most elegant resort is Jurata, established in 1928; modernist hotels dating from the 1930s can also be seen here. At the very end of the peninsula is the fishing port and tourist resort of Hel, with its towering lighthouse and timber-framed fishermen's cottages. Gdynia, until 1918 a small fishing village, is one of the most recently developed towns in Poland. When, after World War I, Poland regained independence but did not control the port of Gdańsk, the authorities decided to build a major port at Gdynia. During World War II Gdynia and its shipyard were used by the German Kriegsmarine, and the town was renamed Gotenhafen by the Germans. A landmark in Gdynia's post-war history came in December 1970, when striking workers were fired on by the militia. In 1980 a monument in their honour was erected.

A walk along the Northern Pier offers an overview of the port at work and a sight of the town's most important landmarks. By the quay are two floating museums, the ships Błyskawica and Dar Pomorza. The Błyskawica is a destroyer that saw action in World War II alongside Allied forces in Narvik, Dunkirk and during the Normandy landings. Dar Pomorza is a three-masted training vessel, built in 1909 and decommissioned in 1981. It was replaced by the Dar Młodzieży, which can sometimes also be seen moored in the port. At the end of the pier is a statue of the writer Joseph Conrad (1857–1924), who was born in Poland as Teodor Josef Konrad Korzeniowski. Beyond the pier stands the Aquarium Gdynskie.

You can walk along Gdynia's seafront promenade all the way to the islet of Kepa Redłowska. A wander around the city's shopping area, with its boutiques and bars, is equally enjoyable.

Sopot is the most popular resort on the Baltic coast. It was established as a sea-bathing centre in 1824 by Jean Georges Haffner, a physician in the Napoleonic army who chose a spot on the coast that since the 17th century had been favoured by the wealthy burghers of Gdańsk for their mansions. Its heyday came in the interwar years, when it attracted some of the richest people in Europe. The pier is a continuation of the main street, Ulica Bohaterów Monte Cassino, colloquially known as Monciak.

The pier is 512 m (1,680 ft long) and the bench running all the way around it is the longest in Europe. The pier is filled with bars, restaurants and cake shops as well as antique shops and boutiques selling amber. It is a pleasant place to enjoy a beer and the sea air. An alternative is coffee at the Grand Hotel, built in 1924–7, which overlooks the beach. This splendid Neo-Baroque building once housed a casino.

The town's narrow streets hide many delightful guesthouses. In the wooded hills behind the town is the Opera Leśna ("Opera in the Woods"), built in 1909 and the venue of the International Song Festival (see p33).

Malbork, the castle of the Teutonic Knights, was begun in the 13th century. In 1309 it was made capital of an independent state established by the order. The first major phase of building was the Assembly Castle, a fortified monastery later known as the Upper Castle. The Middle Castle was built some time after 1310, and the Palace of the Grand Master was begun in 1382–99 by Konrad Zöllner von Rotenstein. In 1457 the castle was taken by Poland and used as a fortress.

It was restored in the 19th century, and again after World War II.

The beautiful Cistercian abbey at Pelplin is one of the finest examples of Gothic architecture in Poland. Work on the monastery began in 1276, when the Cistercians came to Pelplin.

The brick-built church, now a cathedral, dates largely from the 14th century, although its late Gothic vaulting was not completed until the late 15th and early 16th centuries. The imposing triple-naved basilica has no tower, and the west and east fronts are almost identical. The interior contains an outstanding collection of finely crafted furnishings, including

Gothic stalls with a rare carving of the Holy Trinity in which the Holy Ghost is depicted not as the customary dove but as a man. Other fine pieces include the 17th-century Mannerist and Baroque altar and a pulpit supported on a figure of Samson in combat with a lion. There are several paintings by Hermann Hahn, including a large Coronation of the Virgin on the high altar. The monastery was dissolved in 1823, and in 1824 the church became the Cathedral of the Virgin Mary (Katedra NMP).

The monastery buildings now accommodate the Diocesan Museum, whose carved gallery contains a handsome collection of ecclesiastical art as well as illuminated manuscripts. The most highly prized exhibits are a Madonna cabinet from Kolonówka, a rare original Gutenberg Bible of 1435–55 and a 17th-century musical manuscript, the Pelplin Tabulature for Organ. A range of goldwork and liturgical objects are also displayed in the cathedral treasury.

This pretty little town on the River Vistula retains a medieval atmosphere. Founded by the Teutonic Knights in 1276, it was later the seat of a commander of the order and in 1466 became part of Poland.

The town's narrow alleys lead into the Market Square, which is lined with arcaded buildings. While most date from the 18th century, some, like the town hall, have Gothic elements.

Traces of the 14th to 15th-century fortifications that once protected Gniez from invaders still remain. The Gothic Church of St Nicholas (Kościół św. Mikołaja) towers over the town.

Probably built in the first half of the 14th century, it retains its magnificent interior,

Kwidzyn Cathedral, seat of the bishops of Pomerania in the 13th century which includes Gothic vaulting and Mannerist, Baroque and Neo-Gothic altars.

The town's most distinctive feature is the castle of the Teutonic Knights. This imposing fortress was begun in 1283 and completed in the mid-14th century. The castle has a regular plan, with four corner turrets and the remains of a mighty keep in the northeastern corner.

In summer the castle hosts festivals, jousting tournaments and reconstructions of medieval banquets.

From 1243 until 1525, the small town of Kwidzyn was the capital of the Pomezania bishopric, one of four to be established in the territory ruled by the Teutonic Knights. After the order was dissolved, the town passed in turn to Prussia, Germany and Poland.

The cathedral standing on a high escarpment and the castle attached to it are fine examples of Gothic architecture. The cathedral was built in the 14th century on the site of an earlier church, of which only the narthex (a portico or porch separated from the nave by a screen) remains. The porch dates from 1264–84.

In 1862–4 the cathedral was remodelled in the Neo-Gothic style by Friedrich August Stüler. The interior of this vast pseudo-basilica has Gothic murals, which unfortunately were excessively repainted in the 19th century. Many of the earlier furnishings are still in place, including a late Gothic bishop's throne of about 1510 and Baroque altars and tombs. The presbytery gives access to the tiny cell of the Blessed Dorothy of Mątowy, who ordered that she be immured there in 1393. By the north nave is the Baroque chapel of Otto Frederick von Groeben, which contains a tomb depicting the deceased accompanied in death by his three wives.

The castle resembles a knights' fortress, although it was in fact the seat of a chapter. It was built in 1322–47 and partially demolished in the 18th century. Among the interesting features of the castle are the well tower and the exceptionally tall latrine tower, which is connected to the castle by a gallery supported on large arches.

Grudziądz, situated on an escarpment overlooking the River Vistula, was once a major port. It was founded by the Teutonic Knights and became part of Poland in 1466. As a result of the Partitions of Poland, it became part of Prussia from 1772 and in 1918 was returned to Poland. Despite the damage it suffered during World War II, the town has some fine buildings. The Gothic Church of St Nicholas (Kościół św Mikołaja) was begun in the late 13th century and completed in the second half of the 15th. It contains a late Romanesque font from the 14th century. The former Benedictine abbey, including the Palace of the Abbesses of 1749–51, is also of interest. Part of the abbey now houses a museum and art gallery.

The huge complex of harbour granaries, 26 brick buildings built side by side along the waterfront, fulfilled a defensive function as well as being used for storage. From the town side they are hardly noticeable, but seen from the river the granaries appear to surround the entire hillside. They were built mostly in the 17th and 18th centuries, but some are significantly older.

Chełmno 19

The lands of Chełmno that Konrad, Duke of Mazovia, presented to the Teutonic Knights in 1226 were the beginning of the vast state established by the order. The knights' first city, Chełmno, was founded in 1233 and was initially intended to be the capital of their state but this honour went to Malbork (see p264). The civic laws of Chełmno became a model for other cities.

Exploring Chełmno

Chełmno's medieval street plan and 13th to 15th-century fortifications survive virtually intact. The town walls are set with 23 towers and a fortified gate, the Grudziądz Gate, which was converted into a Mannerist chapel in 1620. The town's finest building is the town hall, a late Renaissance building of 1567–72 with traces of earlier Gothic elements. It houses the Chełmno Museum. At the rear of the town hall is an iron measuring stick equalling 4.35 m (just over 14 ft) and known as the Chełmno Measure, or pret. century, once housed the Chełmno Academy, which was founded in 1692.

Six Gothic churches have been preserved in Chełmno. The largest is the Church of the Assumption (Kościół Wniebowzięcia NMP) of 1280–1320, a fine aisled building containing early Gothic frescoes and stone carvings. Two monastery churches, the Church of St James (Kościół św Jakuba) and the Church of Saints Peter and Paul (Kościół św św Piotra i Pawła), date from the same period.

Bydgoszcz lies at the confluence of the River Brda and the Bydgoszcz Canal, which then flow into the Vistula. The city was only briefly part of the state of the Teutonic Knights, after which its fate was linked with that of the rest of Poland. It was the scene of dramatic events on 3 September 1939, when the town's German minority attempted to stage a coup. The Nazis entered the town and massacred thousands of the Polish population.

The old town of Bydgoszcz is set on a bend of the Brda. It has several monumental town houses, the late Gothic church of Saints Nicholas and Martin (Kościół św św Mikołaja i Marcina) and two monasteries: a Bernadine monastery with a church of 1545–52, and the Church and Convent of the Poor Clares (Kościół Klarysek), which today houses a Regional Museum. The half-timbered granaries on the banks of the Brda, built in the 18th and 19th centuries, were used for the salt and wheat that the town traded and to store the beer for which it was renowned.

Golub's main feature is the large castle built by the Teutonic Knights in 1293–1310. From 1466 Golub was part of Poland, and in the 17th century the castle became the residence of Queen Anna Vasa of Sweden, sister of Zygmunt III Vasa. The castle was rebuilt for her in 1616–23 in the Renaissance style. Highly educated and with an interest in botany and natural medicine, Anna Vasa was an unusual woman for her time. She remained a spinster, reputedly because of her ugly appearance.

Today the castle hosts such events as jousting tournaments and oratory competitions, as well as New Year's balls, at which revellers say that the ghost of Queen Anna appears. By ironic coincidence, the Miss Poland beauty contests are also held here.

Ciechocinek is one of Poland's best-known spa towns, which grew and prospered thanks to its iodine-rich salt springs. It is not strictly part of Pomerania but of Kujawy, and has always been a Polish town. The town came into being in 1824, when Stanisław Staszic started to build saltworks and the first of three salt graduation towers. The "towers" are huge wooden frames filled with thorny brushwood which, washed with brine, accumulates salt crystals. Each "tower" is more than 1.7 km (1 mile) wide.

Other features of Ciechocinek are the group of baths built in a variety of styles between 1845 and 1913, a fine park with a flower clock, a pump room designed by Edward Cichocki, a bandstand and open-air theatre, and numerous elegant boarding houses, sanatoria and hotels dating from the start of the 20th century.

Toruń's principal claim to fame is as the birthplace of the astronomer Nicolaus Copernicus (see p273), but it is also renowned for its architecture. The city was founded by the Teutonic Knights in 1233 and quickly became a major centre of trade; in 1454, when its citizens rebelled against the knights' rule, it passed to the kings of Poland. The old town of Toruń, picturesquely situated on the banks of the River Vistula, retains its medieval street plan, and has a rare calm, since most of the streets are closed to traffic.

The Old Market Square is the city's finest open space and still the vibrant heart of its historic district. The centrepiece is the town hall, but on all four sides of the square there are fine buildings. On the south side, at No. 7, is the Meissner Palace, built in 1739 for Jakob Meissner, mayor of Toruń, and given a Neo-Classical façade in 1798. Many of the town houses retain their original details, such as that at No. 17, with a portal made in 1630. The most attractive house in the square is Star House, at No. 35 on the east side, built in 1697. It has a richly ornamented façade, with stuccowork motifs of fruit and flowers. In the square stands a monument to Nicolaus Copernicus made by Friedrich Tiecek in 1853, and a fountain with the figure of a raftsman who, according to legend, rid the citizens of Toruń of a plague of frogs by playing his fiddle.

His heliocentric theory of the universe, which he expounded in De Revolutionibus Orbium Coelestium (1543), posited the fact that the planets rotate around the Sun.

Castle of the Teutonic Knights ul. Przedzamcze.

Little more than ruins remain of the castle that the Teutonic Knights built in Toruń. Before the castle at Malbork (see pp264–5) was built, Toruń was the knights' capital.

The castle was built in the 13th century and extended in the 14th. However, it was destroyed in 1454 when the people of Toruń rose up in rebellion against the knights. Only the latrine tower – a tower overhanging a stream that acted as a sewer – were left standing, although part of the cellars and cloisters survive. The late Gothic house that was built on the site in 1489, probably with materials scavenged from the castle, was the meeting house of the Brotherhood of St George.

New Market Square

The new town emerged as a separate civic entity in 1264. Although it does not have as many historic buildings as the old town, there is a good deal of interest here. In summer the square is filled with fruit and vegetable stalls.

In the centre, where the town hall once stood, is a former Protestant church, built in 1824, probably by the German architect Karl Friedrich Schinkel. It has been converted into a gallery of contemporary art. Fine houses, some with ornate façades like that of the Baroque house at No. 17, surround the square.

WARMIA, MAZURIA AND BIAŁYSTOK REGION

Known as the land of a thousand lakes, northeastern Poland is blessed with vast forests and undulating moraine hills as well as a large number of lakes and rivers. There are no major industrial areas. Its three regions, Warmia, Mazuria and Białostoczczyzna, are ethnically diverse and have had very different histories.

Warmia, the western part of the region, was once inhabited by the early Prussians, and in the 13th century was taken over by the Teutonic Knights, who established a bishopric here.

Warmia became part of Poland in 1466. Under the Partitions it was transferred to Prussia, and was not returned to Poland until 1945. Warmia has many historic churches.

Mazuria and the Iława Lake District at its southern and eastern fringes were also once controlled by the Teutonic Knights. When the order was secularized in 1525, the region became known as ducal Prussia and was ruled by the Hohenzollern family, although until 1657 it was a Polish fiefdom. The area's subsequent history is linked to that of Germany, and it did not become part of Poland again until 1945. Many castles were built by the Knights and some Prussian mansions can be seen here today.

The Suwałki and Augustów lakelands and Białostoczczyzna form the region's eastern part, which once belonged to the grand duchy of Lithuania. The area was covered in primeval forests, and three – the Augustów, Knyszyńska and Białowieża forests – remain today. The Biebrza valley contains Poland's largest stretches of marshland and peat swamps and offers plenty for naturalists. Those interested in religious culture are also well served: the Orthodox church in Grabarka, the old monastery of the Orthodox order of St Basil in Supraśl, the mosque in Kruszyńiany and the synagogue in Tykocin represent a panoply of faiths.

Exploring Warmia, Mazuria and Białystok Region

Northeastern Poland is an ideal place for a longer holiday. It is suitable for watersports such as sailing trips on the Mazurian Lakes or canoeing expeditions down the Czarna Hańcza or Krutynia rivers, and there are also plenty of opportunities for cycling tours. For unspoiled primeval scenery, the Białowieża Forest National Park with its bison reserve and the Biebrza marshes, with their population of nesting birds, are almost without equal.

GETTING AROUND

The main road is Highway No. 16 from Grudziądz via Olsztyn to Augustów. Highway E77 goes from the south to Elbląg, highway 51 runs from Olsztyn to the border with the Russian Kaliningrad District, while highway 8 links Augustów with Białystok. Charter flights depart from Szymany, the region's only airport, near the town of Szczytno, and there are also connections with some airports in Germany. There are rail links with all major towns, and buses link other towns in the region.

Frombork 1

The history of this fortified town goes back to the second half of the 13th century, when it became a Warmian chapter (diocesan capital). The Gothic cathedral, which was erected in 1342–88, has an unusual form, with no towers on its west end, giving it the appearance of a Cistercian monastery, and an eight-bay nave that allowed each member of the chapter to have a separate altar. There are also several canons' stalls in the chancel. The cathedral is surrounded by defensive walls set with towers and pierced by a large main gate in its south side. In the cathedral grounds are a bishop's palace and chapterhouse.

Former High Altar
Commissioned by Bishop Lukasz Watzenrode, uncle of Nicolaus Copernicus, the high altar was made in Toruń in 1504. It is in the form of a polyptych and is now in the south aisle. The central panel has a carving of the Virgin, depicted as a Maiden of the Apocalypse.

The fortified town of Braniewo was founded by the Teutonic Knights in 1250. It was the seat of the bishops of Warmia and later became the diocesan capital of Warmia. A member of the Hanseatic League, the town was a busy port and grew prosperous through the linen trade. During the Counter-Reformation it played an important role as the first Jesuit centre in Poland: the Hosianum Jesuit College was founded here in 1565, and a papal college set up in 1578.

Just 8 km (5 miles) of the Russian border, Braniewo has become an important transit point for travellers crossing from one country into the other. Although it suffered severe damage during World War II, several fine buildings are still to be seen here.

the home of EB beer, which is enjoyed throughout Poland. Founded in 1246 by the Teutonic Knights, the town was part of the Polish Republic from 1466 to 1772, when under the Partitions it passed to Prussian rule. After the devastation caused by World War II, only the most important old buildings of Elbląg were rebuilt. The Brama Targowa tower is all that remains of the former Gothic fortifications that surrounded the town.

In the old town, just a few town houses, on Ulica Wigilijna, survive. Today a programme of rebuilding is under way; new houses in the style of the old Hanseatic merchants' houses, with stairways and their typical gables, are revitalizing the old town. The quarter is well provided with friendly bars and good restaurants.

THE ELBLĄG CANAL

The Elbląg Canal is one of the most extraordinary feats of hydraulic engineering in Poland. A network of canals and locks connecting a number of lakes, it was built in 1848–72 by the Dutchman Georg Jacob Steenke. Including its branches, its total length is 212 km (133 miles). Ingenious slipways enable barges to be hauled overland from one lake to another where the difference in the water levels is too high for conventional locks to be built: there are five slipways along the 10-km (6-mile) section between Buczyniec and Całuny, and from the canal side ships can be seen being hauled along them. You can book a boat trip along the canal that will take you through the Vistula valley and Iława Lake District.

Located in the lakelands of Iławski Moraġ, the town of Moraġ was founded by the Teutonic Knights – like all other towns in the region. It received its municipal charter in 1327. Despite joining the Prussian Union, Moraġ remained part of the state of the Teutonic Knights, and up until 1945 its history was linked to that of ducal Prussia. In the town are the remains of a 14th-century Teutonic castle, a Gothic town hall that was rebuilt after World War II, and the Church of St Joseph (Kościół św Józefa), built in the 14th century and extended in the late 15th, with Gothic polychromes from that time.

Moraġ is the birthplace of the German philosopher Gottfried von Herder (see below). A museum dedicated to him is housed in a Baroque palace that once belonged to the Dohn family.

From 1350 to 1795 Lidzbark was the main residence of the bishops of Warmia, and one of the region's major towns. Picturesquely set on a bend of the River Łyna, the town is dominated by the medieval Bishops' Castle. The massive edifice with corner towers was built in the second half of the 14th century. Of special interest are the Palace of Bishop Grabowski and the Great Refectory in the east wing, the castle's Rococo chapel and armoury in the south wing, the Small Refectory in the west wing and the bishops' private apartments located in the north wing. The cloistered courtyard is decorated with murals. The astronomer Nicolaus Copernicus (see p273) lived here as secretary and physician to his uncle, Bishop Łukasz von Wantzenrode, in 1503–10. The castle now houses the Warmia Museum and a bar and art gallery in its cellars.

On the opposite bank of the Łyna, in the historic town centre, stands the fine Gothic Church of Saints Peter and Paul (Kościół św św Piotra i Pawła). There are also remnants of the city walls, and the main gate, the Brama Wysoka, still stands. The former Protestant church (now Orthodox) nearby was built in 1821–3 by Karl Friedrich Schinkel.

Olsztyn is the largest city in Warmia and Mazuria and the main town of the two regions. It is a centre of both academic and cultural life as well as a major city. It is also associated with several sporting heroes, particularly in speedway and aerobatics. It hosts the various events that make up the Olsztyn Summer Arts festival (see p33).

The Gothic Castle of the Warmian Chapter, which was built in the 14th century, formed the beginning of the city. The castle was built on a hill on the banks of the Łyna. It was a four-sided fortress of modest proportions with residential quarters in the north wing and a service wing to the south. The palace in the east wing was added in 1756–8. The finest part of the building is the refectory, which has intricate crystalline vaulting. On the wall of the cloister is a remarkable diagram of an equinox probably drawn by Nicolaus Copernicus, who combined his duties as an administrator of the chapter in Olsztyn with his astronomical observations. The castle now houses the Museum of Warmia and Mazuria, which has a special section dedicated to Nicolaus Copernicus. The first floor contains an ethnographical and natural history collection.

The castle's fortifications were linked to the city walls, which were built after 1353 on the far side of the moat. The moat today has an open-air theatre that is used for concerts in summer.

In the picturesque old town of Olsztyn, set on a slope, are remnants of the walls and the High Gate. The quaint little Market Square surrounded by arcaded houses was built during the post-war reconstruction of the city, but the houses retain their original cellars, which today are given over to bars, restaurants and cafés. Standing in the middle of the square is a Baroque town hall, whose wings were added in 1927–9.

Another important building in the Market Square is the Gothic Cathedral of St James (Katedra św Jakuba), most probably built between 1380 and 1445. The very fine crystalline vaulting was added in the early 16th century.

Battle of Grunwald (15 Jul).

The fields between Grunwald and Stębark (Tannenberg in German) were the scene of one of the greatest battles of the Middle Ages. On 15 July 1410, the forces of the Teutonic Knights – some 14,000 cavalry plus infantry commanded by Ulrich von Jungingen, the Grand Master of the Teutonic Knights – faced 24,000 Polish-Lithuanian and Ruthenian cavalry and several thousand infantry led by Władysław II Jagiełło. The knights suffered a resounding defeat, and the Grand Master himself was killed. Historians believe that during World War I, in August 1914, the German Field Marshal Hindenburg deliberately chose this site for his victorious battle against the Russians in order to negate the memory of that defeat. The monument to the medieval Battle of Grunwald that stands on the site was designed by Jerzy Bandura and Witold Cęckiewicz and unveiled in 1960. Nearby is a small museum with a collection of documents about the battle and archaeological finds from the site. For several years the battle's anniversary has been marked by re-enactments of the engagement as it is described in chronicles.

Święta Lipka has one of the most important shrines of the cult of the Virgin in Poland. The name of the town means “holy lime” (or linden tree), and the legend that grew up concerns a miraculous sculpture of the Virgin that was carved by a prisoner in the 15th century and hung from a roadside lime tree. A chapel containing the statue of the Virgin, destroyed during the Reformation, was built around it. The land was part of ducal Prussia. In 1619 a temporary chapel was built here, followed in 1687–93 by a proper church, which was cared for by the Jesuits. In 1694–1708 cloisters and outside chapels were added and the façade and belfry were completed in 1729.

During the Counter-Reformation Święta Lipka was a Catholic stronghold within Protestant ducal Prussia.

Large donations were made for decorating the church, resulting in one of the finest and most intriguing examples of Baroque art in Poland.

The interior contains frescoes, including trompe l'oeil paintings in the dome by Mathias Mayer, and the high altar has an image of the Virgin dating from about 1640. The figure organ built in 1721 by Johann Mosengel of Królewiec (Königsberg) is a great attraction for both tourists and pilgrims. In summer, about eight organ recitals are given every day, and during some of them the figures in the organ loft are set in motion.

Road Map E1.  30,000.
www.ketrzyn.pl

From the 14th century, Kętrzyn was the seat of the Prosecutor of the Teutonic Knights, who built the castle that can still be seen today. Kętrzyn then passed to Prussia and later Germany, but retained a sizeable Polish population. The original name for the town was Rastembork; in 1946 it was renamed in honour of the Polish national activist Wojciech Kętrzyński. The old town was almost entirely flattened during World War II: only the town walls and the Church of St George (Kościół św Jerzego) survived. Its exterior is modest, but the interior is impressive – its finest decoration is the crystalline vaulting of around 1515.

Environs

Ten km (6 miles) east of Kętrzyn is Gierłoż, location of the “Wolf’s Lair”, Adolf Hitler’s headquarters in 1940. It consisted of dozens of reinforced concrete bunkers built in woodland. There was also an airfield, railway lines and a power station. Here, on 20 July 1944, the German officer Claus von Stauffenberg made an unsuccessful attempt on Hitler’s life. The lair was never discovered by the Allies, and the bunkers were blown up by the withdrawing Germans in January 1945.

The Great Mazurian Lakes ⑬

The Great Mazurian Lakes are the largest in Poland and a popular holiday spot in summer. Despite this, the countryside remains largely unspoiled, and many rare plants and birds thrive here. The lakes are interlinked by rivers and canals, and are suitable for yachting or canoeing trips. Another way to see the region is to take a cruise aboard a ship of the Mazurian Shipping Company or to drive along the roads that wind among the lakeside trees.

The district is a paradise for ramblers and for those who delight in discovering secret spots. Its woods conceal overgrown bunkers built by the Germans in World War II.

Ryn

The castle that towers over the town was built by Konrad Wallenrod, Grand Master of the Teutonic Knights, for his brother Frederick in 1394. It was rebuilt in the English Gothic style in 1853.

The summer capital of the Mazurian Lake District is the location of its main yachting marina. A variety of vessels – from sailing dinghies, yachts and canoes to motorboats – are available for hire.

The church, cemetery and convent at Wojnowo were built by the Old Believers, who fled Russia in the 18th and 19th centuries.

WILD SWANS

Lake Łuknajno, which is listed by UNESCO as a World Biosphere Reserve, has become one of Poland's finest nature reserves for wild swans. The fact that the lake is shallow – its average depth does not exceed 1.5 m (4 ft) – makes it easy for the birds to feed on the weed that grows on the lakebed. In 1922 eggs laid by the swans of Lake Łuknajno were used to regenerate

Canoeing on the Czarna Hańcza and Augustów Canal 14

This is one of the most beautiful canoeing routes in Poland. In some places the narrow, winding River Czarna Hańcza is as swift as a mountain stream; in others its course slows as its banks widen. The route downstream passes swamps and lakes and goes through locks on the Augustów Canal that have remained almost unchanged since the time that they were built at the beginning of the 19th century. Canoe trips may be made individually or in organized groups.

Lake Wigry, in Wigry National Park, is the largest lake in the Suwałki region. Part of the "silent zone", it has numerous islands.

This monastery stands on the peninsula in Lake Wigry. The monastery buildings have been converted into a hotel. Beyond, the Czarna Hańcza River flows from the lake.

The Czarna Hańcza River ③

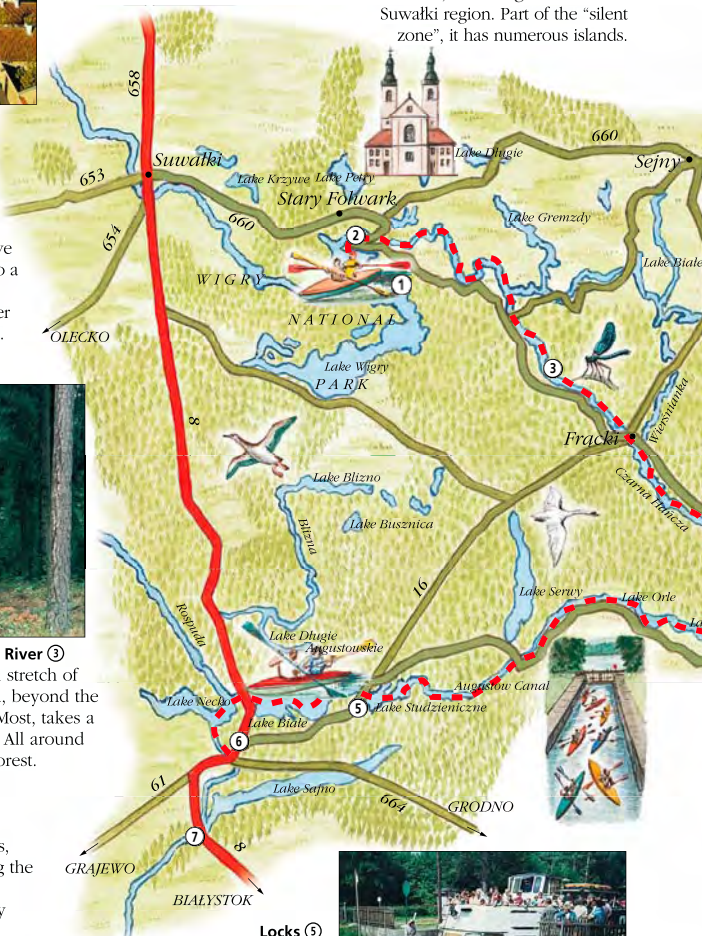

The most beautiful stretch of the Czarna Hańcza, beyond the village of Wysoki Most, takes a meandering route. All around is the Augustów Forest.

Rygol ④

Here the river forks, its right arm joining the Augustów Canal. Canoeists may stray off the route and follow the canal leading to the border with Belarus, but they must turn back at the last lock before the border, which is closed.

Locks ⑤

The Augustów Canal connects the River Niemen with the River Biebrza and, further on, with the Vistula, passing through several locks on the way. Built in 1823–39, the canal was a great engineering achievement.

Biebrza National Park is one of the wildest places in Europe, untouched by human activity. It stretches for 70 km (50 miles) along the banks of the River Biebrza and contains Poland's largest swamps, which are home to a wide variety of wildlife. A close encounter with a moose is a distinct possibility. The greatest attraction of the swamps, however, is their rich bird life; over 260 species live here, and bird-watchers from afar come to the swamps to observe them. The most interesting swamp for bird life is Red Swamp (Czerwone Bagno), part of a strictly protected nature reserve accessible only by means of a wooden walkway. Walkways have also been installed in other parts of the park. A walk along the red tourist trail holds a range of attractions – although you may have to wade through mud to reach them. Visitors may hire a guide and tour the swamps in a punt, or descend the River Biebrza in a canoe, for which a ticket and the permission of the park management are required.

In Osowiec, in the middle of the swamps, there is a beaver reserve. Nearby stand the partly blown-up walls of a Russian redoubt. Although it was impregnable, the Russians, fearful of the German offensive, abandoned it in 1915.

The town of Tykocin was granted a municipal charter in 1425. In 1659 it was given to Stefan Czarnecki, hero of the bitter wars with Sweden, in recognition of his service to the king and to Poland. It later passed to the royal field commander Jan Klemens Branicki. The town owes its present appearance to renovation – financed by Branicki – that was carried out after a fire in 1741.

In the centre of the Market Square there stands a Baroque monument to Stefan Czarnecki that was carved between 1761 and 1763 by the court sculptor Pierre Coudray. The parish church on the east side of the square was built a little earlier, in 1750. The Baroque synagogue, which dates from 1642, is a relic of the town's former Jewish population. Białystok is the largest town in northeast Poland. Its population is both Polish and Belarussian, something that can easily be read in the cityscape: the domes of the Orthodox church rise up next to the towers of the Catholic church, and there are many Belarussian cultural institutions. Białystok was once owned by the Branicki family; indeed, the layout of the town is dominated by their former residence, Branicki Palace.

The Baroque palace was built by Tylman van Gameren in the 17th century and extended by Jan Zygmunt Deybel – who gave it the appearance of a royal mansion – between 1728 and 1758. It was modelled on the Palace of Versailles, and a formal park, with terraces, canals, fountains, summer houses and numerous sculptures, was laid out around it. Like other members of the high aristocracy, Jan Klemens Branicki, royal field commander and an extremely wealthy man in his own right, maintained his own private army. He was also a connoisseur of art.

In political circles, however, he was unpopular, opposing reform and contributing to the ruin of Poland. Parts of the palace now house the town's medical academy.

Another interesting building is the Church of St Roch (Kościół św Rocha), a delicate construction in reinforced concrete, designed by Oskar Sosnkowski, and built between 1927 and 1946. The Baroque town hall in the Market Square houses a Regional Museum.

Kruszyniany and nearby Bohoniki count among their inhabitants the descendants of the Tartars who settled here in the 17th century. Although they became fully integrated into the community a long time ago, their Muslim faith and customs live on. Descendants of the Tartars also live in the Podlasie villages of Nietupy, Łużyny and Drahle. Kruszyniany has a charming wooden mosque, originating in the 18th century and rebuilt in 1843. The tombstones in the Muslim graveyard face Mecca.

The Białowieża Forest, covering almost 1,500 sq km (580 sq miles), is the largest natural forest in Europe. It lies partly in Poland and partly in Belarus. The larger – Belarussian – part is virtually inaccessible to tourists; the Polish part became a national park in 1932. Many parts of the park have preserved their natural character – that of a primeval forest. The areas of greatest interest may be visited only with a guide. Recently, the park's borders have been extended on the Polish side.

The forest has an impressive abundance of flora and fauna. There are several thousand species of plants and 11,000 species of animals, including many very rare birds, such as the capercaillie, black stork and golden eagle. Larger mammals include elk, deer, roe deer, wild boar, wolf, lynx and, most famously, the European bison.

On the road running through the forest there is a bison-breeding centre and enclosures where bison, deer, wild boar and Polish ponies can be seen. The park also has a forest museum, whose exhibits were once housed in a brick hunting lodge used by the tsars. It was torched by German forces in 1944. Only an Orthodox church remains.

Białowieża National Park has been listed by UNESCO as a World Biosphere Reserve.

For Poland's Orthodox Christians, there is no more important place of pilgrimage in the country than the Holy Mountain outside Grabarka. The story goes that in 1770, when the plague was ravaging the town, the inhabitants of Grabarka were directed by a heavenly sign to erect a cross on the hill. The plague passed and the hill became a hallowed site.

To this day its slopes are covered with hundreds of votive crosses. The original wooden church, destroyed by an arsonist in 1990, was replaced by a brick-built church. The Orthodox convent next to it is the only one in Poland.

Drohiczyn, set on a high bank of the Bug River, is today a small, quiet town. As early as the 13th century, however, it was a major centre of trade, and in 1520 it became the provincial capital of Podlasie. In 1795, with the Third Partition of Poland, it was demoted to the status of an ordinary village.

The oldest surviving church in the town is the Baroque Franciscan church, dating from 1640–60. The cathedral, originally a Jesuit church, dates from 1696–1709. Nearby stands the former Jesuit monastery, later taken over by the Piarists. The striking Benedictine church, begun in 1744, has a typically Baroque undulating façade and elliptical interior. The Orthodox church, originally Greek Catholic, dates from 1792. To the east of the town, along the winding Bug River, lies a park, the Podlasie Bug River Gorge.

EUROPEAN BISON

The European bison (Bison bonasus) is the largest mammal native to Europe. The weight of an adult bull may reach 1,000 kg (2,200 lb). The largest population of bison ever recorded – 1,500 animals – was in Białowieża in 1860. Hunting these animals has always been restricted, but by World War I (1914–18) the species faced extinction. In 1929, several bison were brought to Poland from zoos in Sweden and Germany to be bred in their natural habitat. The first were set free in Białowieża National Park in 1952. Today bison can also be seen in the other great forests of Poland, including Borecka, Knyszyńska and Niepołomice (see p162).

WHERE TO STAY

Only a few years ago the standard of Polish hotels was much lower than that of their Western European counterparts. Since 1989, however, many new luxury hotels have been built and many existing hotels have been modernized. Nonetheless, there is still a dearth of good, affordable hotels. Recently, many palaces and manor houses that would otherwise have fallen into ruin have been transformed into comfortable small hotels. They are to be found all over Poland. While some offer luxurious suites, others provide rooms with period interiors at a moderate price. Cheap beds are also provided by PTTK hostels, mountain lodges and private guesthouses, and there are many campsites.

A list of selected hotels all over Poland, from the small and modest to the large and luxurious, including those run by international hotel chains, is to be found on pages 298–311.

Part of the elegant lobby of the Grand Hotel in Sopot (see p310)

For comfort at reasonable prices, try the small modern hotels with all conveniences and a pleasant family atmosphere. Recommended in this category are the Hanza, in the historic part of Gdańsk, and the Vivaldi in Poznań. Recently converted buildings are also recommended: among these are the Villa Hestia in Sopot, which has just a small number of rooms, and was once the eclectic home of a pre-war millionaire from Gdańsk, and the Jelonek in Jelenia Góra, a tastefully renovated Baroque tenement house.

MANOR HOUSES AND PALACES

Those who prefer staying in historic mansions can choose from a number of such establishments all over the country. Most – the former property of wealthy landlords or rich factory owners – were reduced to ruin in the communist era, so they are not filled with valuable paintings, fine antique furniture and the trappings of a comfortable lifestyle characteristic of old mansions. Some palaces have been thoroughly renovated,

HOTELS

At the upper end of the scale is a small number of luxury hotels with fine period interiors. These hotels were established in the 19th century or at the beginning of the 20th. The most elegant – and expensive – in this category is the Hotel Bristol in Warsaw. The Hotel Francuski in Cracow and Pod Orłem in Bydgoszcz may also be included in this group. The most common type of hotel is the architecturally mediocre modern building; against these, others such as the imposing Warsaw Sheraton, tend to stand out. Before 1989, the largest network of hotels in Poland was run by a state-owned company called Orbis. Today many Orbis hotels are part of well-known international chains, such as Novotel and Mercure.

One of the lounges in the luxurious Hotel Bristol in Warsaw (see p298) and their interiors refurbished with great attention paid to the needs and comfort of guests. They are usually quite expensive. Most of the grander hotels have a peaceful setting among trees in beautiful parks.

Others, at the cheaper end of the scale, tend to be furnished in a more basic manner, with functional rather than comfortable beds. This type of hotel will not have a swimming pool, lift or nightclub.

RESERVATIONS

When planning to visit a major town or city, a resort or a well-known tourist area, it is best to book a hotel in advance. Finding a room once you arrive can be difficult. In Warsaw, hotel accommodation is particularly scarce in June and July, from September to November and around public holidays. In Cracow, the tourist season lasts the whole year. In Poznań, accommodation is hard to find during the trade fairs that take place here throughout the year. Rooms in resorts are hard to find during the holiday season. Accommodation in mountain resorts also tends to be scarce over Christmas and during the skiing season.

FACILITIES

Recent programmes of renovation and modernization mean that there has been a great improvement in the general standard of accommodation available in Poland. In many hotels, rooms have en suite toilets and showers or baths. Most have television and some have a video recorder. Generally, rooms tend not to be very large.

Some hotels offer an inexpensive laundry service; superior-standard hotels provide a 24-hour service and minibar. Guests should check out before noon. Those who wish to leave later may deposit their luggage in reception. Most hotel staff speak English.

PRICES AND REDUCED RATES

Hotel tariffs at the upper end of the scale are relatively high and change according to the season. The most expensive hotels are located in Warsaw and Poznań, closely followed by those in other major cities. During the trade fairs, accommodation prices in Poznań are usually much higher than at other times.

Hotels in small towns are generally cheaper, as are the more out-of-the-way manor houses or palace hotels. Most hotels offer reduced rates at weekends and special rates for children.

Hotels belonging to international chains such as the Intercontinental offer a range of reduced rates. It is also acceptable to negotiate a reduction when booking. Budget accommodation is provided in the form of hotels that have been converted from hostels for workers, soldiers or students.

The restaurant of the Grand Hotel in Cracow (see p301)

HIDDEN EXTRAS

In most hotels, VAT (which currently varies from 7 to 22 per cent) and service are included in the price. As in other countries, international telephone calls made from hotel rooms can be quite expensive because the hotel charges a commission on top of the cost of the call. Breakfast is sometimes charged as an extra. Buffet breakfasts or pre-prepared breakfast sets are particularly popular. Tipping staff is not customary except in the more expensive hotels.

As a general rule there is no reduction for single travellers – the same price will be charged for a double room regardless of whether occupied by one or two guests. However, if there are many vacancies, some hotels may offer a double room for the same rate as they would charge for a single room.

ROOMS AND FLATS TO LET

Rooms in private houses in towns and resorts are usually easy to find, even during the tourist season. In towns, the best way of obtaining information on private accommodation is from a tourist information centre. In a resort, it is better to explore and find a room on your own, comparing standards and prices. On the coast or at lakeside resorts, rooms may be hard to find outside the tourist season as many guesthouses only operate in summer. Accommodation agencies should provide a range of options from which to choose. When booking a room through an agency, payment must be made in cash. Cash is also the generally accepted form of payment in guesthouses.

AGRITOURISM

Agritourism, a type of ecological tourism connected with the countryside, has been developing since the beginning of the 1990s. As well as taking a room and enjoying home-cooked food and such things as fresh cow's milk, tourists may participate in daily farming tasks. At many farms, tourists can ride on horseback or in a horse-drawn carriage. Prices vary depending on the standard of accommodation and services provided. Addresses of agritourist farms are available from tourist agencies. Such magazines as Podróże, Voyage and the tourist supplement issued with the Saturday edition of Gazeta Wyborcza may also be useful.

The Kadyiny Palace Hotel

YOUTH HOSTELS

Poland has an excellent network of youth hostels. In most tourist areas they operate all year round. In summer, empty school buildings are converted into temporary hostels. Permanent hostels usually have shared rooms and a communal bathroom and kitchen. Due to their popularity, it is advisable to book at least two or three days in advance.

On Fridays and Saturdays, as well as in spring and autumn, rooms in youth hostels are more difficult to find because they tend to be booked by school excursion groups. Hostels are usually closed from 10am to 4pm or 5pm, and again after 10pm.

The price per night is low, especially if you share a room with several other people. Holders of International Youth Hostel Federation cards are entitled to considerable reductions, even on these low rates.

MOUNTAIN LODGES

Hiking along marked mountain trails has long been popular in Poland and is one of the most important areas of tourism. The network of mountain lodges is very extensive; indeed, it is possible to walk the length and breadth of the Carpathian and Sudeten mountains staying only in mountain hostels.

Standards vary from modest to quite comfortable. It is advisable to book in advance, although after nightfall the staff cannot refuse to let you in, even if all the rooms are occupied. At worst you will end up sleeping on the floor. Mountain lodges usually have bathrooms, and buffets serving hot meals. It is also possible to hire equipment.

When hiking along Poland's southern border, hikers may stay in lodges on the Czech and Slovak side of the border and pay in Polish currency.

The Ornak alpine lodge in the Tatra Mountains

One of Poland's many campsites

CAMPSITES

While a few campsites are open all year round, most operate only from the beginning of May to the end of September. Standards do vary. Campsites can be found on the periphery of most large towns and cities as well as in some smaller towns, and at almost all tourist spots on the coast, beside lakes, rivers and in the mountains. In summer, some campsites are so crowded that tents almost touch one another, and it is usually quite noisy late into the night. All campsites are fenced in and have resident staff. Lighting, electricity (220 V), as well as running water, mobile toilets and showers are also provided. The large ones that operate throughout the year are better equipped and offer lounges, bungalows, playgrounds for children, and football pitches. At bivouacs, conditions are basic.

DISABLED TRAVELLERS

Newly built and recently renovated hotels and guesthouses usually have special facilities for disabled people, such as wheelchair access and chairlifts. Rooms with facilities for the disabled are also increasingly widely provided. However, provision for special needs is by no means universal, so it is advisable to contact the hotel beforehand to check what facilities for disabled people, if any, are provided.

TRAVELLING WITH CHILDREN

Children are welcome in most hotels and guesthouses; Polish culture is on the whole child-friendly.

Extra beds in parents' rooms are usually provided on request. Many hotels offer special rates for children, and some make no charge for children up to the age of 3 or even, in some cases, 14. This cannot be assumed to be the case, however, so when booking it is definitely advisable to enquire.

Most hotel restaurants also serve special meals for children, although high chairs are rarely provided. Crèches and childcare facilities can be hard to find, so again, if childcare is required it is essential to check in advance.

A low-level hotel occupying a corner of Zamość's Renaissance Old Town. Rooms are generously sized, if a little bland, with the more expensive suites overlooking the town hall. A glass-covered atrium houses the reception, with other touches including a gymnasium and a commendable on-site restaurant. www.orbis.pl

ZAMOŚĆ Senator

ul. Rynek Solny 4, 22-400 Tel 084 638 76 10 Fax 084 638 76 13 Rooms 56Road map G5

A charming hotel situated within close reach of the town square. A defiantly Old World atmosphere reigns in the hotel lobby and restaurant, and while sleeping quarters are a little less atmospheric, the Senator still represents one of the best deals you'll find. Prices for large groups can be negotiated. www.senatorhotel.pl

WHERE TO EAT

Polish food still suffers from a poor international image, but new restaurants serving national dishes as well as delicacies from different parts of the world have recently been established in Poland. Generally, it is not difficult to find a good restaurant in a large town or city, although the prices are often exorbitant. In smaller towns, on the other hand, a little exploration may be required, but will often reveal a restaurant serving good, inexpensive food.

The restaurants and bars listed on pages 316–27 have been selected on the basis of the quality of their cuisine and service. Many are hotel restaurants, because in Poland this is where the best cuisine is often to be found.

The Kubicki restaurant in Ulica Wartka, Gdańsk (see p324)

MEALS

The traditional Polish breakfast has a high calorie content. It consists of boiled or fried eggs, smoked meats, cheese and, in the winter, soup. Today, soup rarely appears at the breakfast table, although sausage and pâté are still normal sights. In town centres, tourists may have difficulty finding establishments serving breakfast. Only some bars and restaurants serve morning meals. Hotel restaurants, by contrast, customarily serve breakfast.

Traditionally, the evening meal – consisting of soup, a main course (usually a meat dish), and a dessert – is the most important meal of the day. Polish restaurants are gradually adopting a lighter cuisine, adding to traditional menus such dishes as salads, although this is not very common. Tourists may have problems finding good restaurants in small towns, where the choice is likely to be limited to soups, snacks and pork chops.

EATING OUT

Many tourists are surprised to find that, compared to other countries, Poland has a relatively small number of restaurants. This is because there is no great tradition of eating out, since most Polish people simply cannot afford to do it on a regular basis. Restaurant customers are therefore chiefly business people, commercial travellers and tourists.

In large towns and cities, particularly in Warsaw, there is a severe shortage of mid-price restaurants; nearly all restaurants are on the expensive side and the price of alcohol is exorbitant.

In Poland, lunch is served from noon and it is possible to have your midday meal at any time in the afternoon.

Restaurants then stay open until the late evening. In large towns and cities, they may keep their dining rooms open until the last guests are ready to leave, although the kitchens usually close at 10pm.

In more upmarket restaurants, be aware that customers are expected to be well dressed, although men are not usually required to wear a tie.

Most restaurants in large towns and cities accept credit cards. Elsewhere this is not the case and it is customary to pay in cash. Information on paying with credit cards is included in the list of restaurants on pages 316–27.

TYPES OF RESTAURANTS

Very good restaurants with gourmet menus can only be found in the largest cities, and even then they are not very numerous. In the countryside, the exceptions to the rule are restaurants in luxurious hotels, especially those located in castles or palaces. In most cities – and most especially in Warsaw – it is difficult to find a restaurant that serves good food at reasonable prices. In some cities it is possible to find bars serving so-called “home food”, and it is often possible to have a good and inexpensive meal in a small town or village.

Cracow in particular is renowned for its good restaurants. Those in Poznań and Wrocław are also recommended, and Zakopane is famous for its regional cuisine.

CHEAP FOOD

There are some traditional establishments where it is possible to eat cheaply in Poland: bars. Unfortunately, few bars can be recommended, since most of them serve pre-prepared and often frozen food. In some places a “milk bar”, a relic from Communist times, can be found and here a portion of pancakes or Russian ravioli (pierogi) costs very little.

There are also salad bars, where in addition to salads, which are sold by weight, sandwiches or soup are also served. Most pubs include one or two hot dishes on the menu. A traditional Polish café serves only drinks and desserts. Newly opened bars in large towns and cities go beyond this, offering a selection of additional light dishes, such as soups, spaghetti, salads and warm vegetable dishes, but this variety comes at a high price.

The Tsarina restaurant in Warsaw (see p316)

FAST FOOD

In recent years, Poland has experienced a real invasion of fast-food outlets in the form of McDonald's, KFC and Pizza Hut. Many Polish fast-food establishments also offer takeaway hamburgers and portions of pizza. In coastal resorts and the Great Mazurian Lakes region, fish is served from seasonal fish stalls. Other options include open-air barbecues serving roast sausages, or stalls serving Vietnamese and Turkish dishes.

PRICES

Prices in Polish restaurants vary in the extreme. In a luxurious, renowned restaurant in a large town or city, especially in Warsaw, a three-course meal without wine may cost as much as 150–200 PLN. Elsewhere a comparable meal should cost not more than 70 PLN, and in smaller towns as little as 20–30 PLN.

Alcohol is relatively expensive in Poland, and the price of imported liquor is exorbitant.

The prices given on the menu include VAT and service. Beyond this, it is customary to leave a tip of 10 per cent. Very often, menu prices apply just to the main dish; an extra charge is made for potatoes, salads, and other side dishes, and they will appear on the bill as separate items. In the case of fish and meat dishes, such as a joint of pork, the price on the menu refers to a portion of 100 g (just under ¼ lb). When ordering, it is advisable to specify the weight of the portion, since the bill will show only the price of the whole meal.

The Flavours of Poland

Polish cuisine, like that of many central European countries, makes heavy use of meat, especially pork, which is often served quite plainly with potatoes or rice and cabbage. However, because of the long Baltic coastline in the north of the country, fish is also likely to feature on many menus. Carp, trout and herring are particular favourites. Around Cracow, in the south, the local forests yield a bounty of quality game, with duck being very popular. The legacy of former rule by Austria is also evident in the south, especially in some of the sophisticated cakes and pastries.

MEAT

Pork (wieprzowina) is the most popular meat by far in Poland. It usually comes as a steak (kotlet schabowy) or on the bone (golonka wieprzowa) and also appears in soups, sausages and as hams. Polish hams are generally cured and have a rich, sweet flavour. Ham is mainly served cold as an appetizer with cheese and pickles, though it may also be eaten for breakfast. Poland also produces high quality veal (cielęcina), which is often dished up with a rich mushroom sauce (cielęcina po staropolsku) or with cabbage and raisins.

POULTRY AND GAME

Chicken (kurczaka) is a staple food in Poland and drumsticks (podudzie) are especially popular. Chicken livers (wątróbka), served with a fruit sauce, are considered a delicacy.

A wide variety of game roams the forests of southern Poland. Pheasant (bażant), duck (kaczka), goose (gęś), venison (comber), rabbit (królik) and hare (zajac) are found on many local menus. Availability varies with the season; autumn is the best time to enjoy game.

LOCAL DISHES AND SPECIALITIES

Green cabbage

Many classic Polish dishes are offered at restaurants all over the country, but fish also features prominently on northern menus, while those of the south offer a range of game. The most varied and cosmopolitan cuisine is found in large cities, such as Warsaw and Cracow, where top chefs run the kitchens of some of the grand hotels. The national dish, bigos, comes from eastern Poland. It is hearty and warming for the long, bleak winters found there, as is another dish from this chilly region, pierogi (pasta dumplings, stuffed with meat, cheese or fruit). Both are influenced by the food of neighbouring Russia. Polish cakes and desserts also tend to be heavy and rich, although most originate in the warmer south, once ruled by Austria.

Bigos Chunks of meat and sausage are simmered with sauerkraut, cabbage, onion, potatoes, herbs and spices.

FISH

Fish features strongly on menus in northern Poland, where herring (śledź) is a central part of the diet. It comes pickled, in oil, with onions, with soured cream – in fact, with just about everything. Rolmops po kaszubsku (marinated herring wrapped around pickled onion, then spiked with cloves and dipped in soured cream) are widely enjoyed. Other popular fish are freshwater trout (ptąg) – served simply grilled with boiled potatoes; carp (karpia) – often accompanied by horseradish sauce; and salmon (łosoś). A treat in early summer is smoked salmon served with spears of fresh asparagus (łosoś wędzony ze szparagami), which is then in season.

VEGETABLES

Poland produces many fine quality vegetables. The hardy cabbage (kapusta) remains the country's top vegetable. It is used in so many ways, including raw in salads and simply boiled to partner meat or fish. Cabbage soup (kapusniak) and sauerkraut are on every menu. Potatoes are also a staple. They come boiled, baked and mashed, though rarely roasted.

Polish pretzels on sale in a Cracow bread shop

Peppers are popular too, often served stuffed with rice and minced meat or pickled in summer salads. Root vegetables such as carrots, parsnips, swede (rutabaga), turnips and beetroot make their way into a range of dishes. Mushrooms grow wild all over Poland and come both cooked and pickled as a tasty addition to many meals.

SNACKS

Sausages A wide range of smoked and unsmoked varieties are on offer at the profusion of street stalls and snack bars that can be found on most city streets.

Precles (pretzels) Another favourite street snack, these are popular, freshly baked, at train and bus stations first thing in the morning.

Zapiekanki Often referred to as Polish-style pizzas, these are tasty, open-top baguettes, spread with cheese and tomato, then toasted and served piping hot. They are also a common item on street-stall menus.

Smalec This snack consists of fried lard, liberally sprinkled with sea salt, and eaten with chunks of crusty bread. It can be found as a bar snack in most pubs and makes a good accompaniment to beer.

Pierogi These ravioli-style dumplings may be stuffed with meat, sauerkraut, mushrooms, cheese or fruit.

Barszcz This beetroot soup, flavoured with lemon and garlic, may be served clear or with beans or potatoes.

Poppy seed roll A rich yeasted dough is wrapped around a sweet poppy-seed filling and baked until lightly golden.

Choosing a Restaurants

Restaurants have been selected for their good cuisine and interesting location. They are listed by region, the coloured tabs in the margins corresponding to those by which the regions of Poland are identified throughout the guide. For the street map of Warsaw, see pages 100-103. For the road map of Poland, see the inside back cover.

Indian food has not travelled well to Poland, with many chefs choosing to use inferior ingredients and cooking only the mildest of curries. India Curry, however, gets everything right – from its menu, which goes beyond the mainstream dishes, to the tasteful interiors, which include a bubbling fountain. Those on a budget will enjoy the lunch deals.

THE ROYAL ROUTE Adler

Map 3 C1

A fashionable spot with hip lighting and a crowd consisting of "it-girls" and the men who adore them, the menu, which specializes in spaghetti, has won fans across the city, but other continental bites are available too. This place also doubles as a bar, and it is popular with a fun crowd.

CITY CENTRE Buddha Club*ul. Jasna 22, 00-054 Tel 022 828 67 71Map 1 C5

Fusion food at top-tier prices is served here, though the quality more than justifies the price tag. The Buddha Club brings Indonesia to your doorstep with choices such as stir-fried beef in oyster sauce and fried lobster in coconut crumbs. Everything is for sale here, from the cutlery to the gold-plated statue of Buddha that sits peacefully inside.

CITY CENTRE Kuchnia Kwai*ul. Marszałkowska 64, 00-544 Tel 022 621 21 81Map 3 B2

Relatively new, Kuchnia Kwai is a hit with the local media and expat community. Fusion food with Korean and Thai influences is served in a clean room decorated with Oriental sculptures and pictures of the People's Army. After your meal, be sure to pay a visit to Bar Below downstairs, the drinking den of choice for foreigners in Warsaw.

FURTHER AFIELD Banja Luka*ul. Puławska 101, 02-595 Tel 022 854 0782*

A Balkan menu that features Croat, Serbian and Bosnian specialties is served inside a warm interior reminiscent of a mountain lodge. Banja Luka is by no means central, so do expect to be travelling there and back by taxi, but the portions and prices make up for the trek. A superb summer garden, complete with pond, is the icing on the cake.

FURTHER AFIELD Biosfeera*al. Niepodległości 80, 02-626 Tel 022 898 01 55*

Part of a growing trend towards healthy eating, Biosfeera is a modern space with paper lanterns and a hip atmosphere where you will find a sharply dressed young crowd feeding on salads and vegetarian tortillas and sipping non-alcoholic cocktails. The restaurant operates a strict no-smoking policy.

FURTHER AFIELD Radio Café*ul. Nowogrodzka 56, 00-695 Tel 022 625 27 84Map 3 B2

Although Radio Café is comparatively inexpensive, its location in the shadow of the Marriott tends to ward off any cheapskates. A mixed group of Polish intellectuals and foreigners who appreciate the local food can be found enjoying their dinners here, and at night the restaurant assumes a smoky, alcohol-fuelled ambience. A local legend.

FURTHER AFIELD Warsaw Tortilla Factory*ul. Wilcza 46, 00-679 Tel 022 621 86 22Map 3 B3

This place offers by far the best Mexican food in Poland, with an array of salsas so hot they may lead to convulsions. Cheap by Warsaw's overpriced standards, Tortilla Factory is regularly crowded with locals and foreigners enjoying their burritos and quesadillas. The bar area is the source of some of the best margaritas in the city.

FURTHER AFIELD Le Cedre*al. Solidarności 61, 03-402 Tel 022 670 11 66Map 2 F3

Across the river from the Old Town, Le Cedre must be one of few restaurants in Poland to tout views of a bear pit (belonging to the zoo opposite). Hookah pipes and the occasional belly dancer strive to create a Middle Eastern atmosphere, while the skewered meats are a pleasure. Its popularity with Lebanese diplomats speaks for itself.

FURTHER AFIELD Dom Polski*ul. Francuska 11, 03-906 Tel 022 616 24 32*

Having dinner at Dom Polski has long been a vital rite of passage for holiday-makers and expats alike, and this stands out as one of the classiest treats in Warsaw. The menu changes with the seasons, but it always seems to include fantastic game dishes, while the interiors, set inside a detached pre-war villa, are redolent of a country manor.

FURTHER AFIELD Belvedere*ul. Agrykola 1 (on the grounds of Royal Łazienki Park), 00-460 Tel 022 841 22 50Map 3 C5

A stalwart of Warsaw's dining scene, Belvedere enjoys an awesome location inside a conservatory in the heart of Łazienki Park. Watch peacocks amble outside while black-tie waiters deliver gourmet meals such as quail stuffed with liver to your table. Definitely on the expensive side but well worth the outlay if you are looking to impress.

MAZOWIA AND THE LUBLIN REGIONADAMOWICE Karczma Soleul. Styropianowa 2, 96-320 Tel 046 857 30 74Road map E3

This pleasant, folksy lodge is far classier than one would imagine from first impressions. The menu is Polish, but it includes several international choices too; try the French-style duck served in cherry sauce. The lion's share of ingredients are imported from Italy, with the head chef also trained under Italian guidance.

GRÓJEC La Terrazza*ul. Norwida 2/4, 05-600 Tel 048 664 58 17Road map E4

This authentic Italian restaurant is run by cooks who hail from the southern Apennines. Wholesome, traditional cuisine and an extensive choice of dishes have earned La Terrazza its undeniable popularity. It is located on the A7 highway connecting Warsaw with Cracow.

KAZIMERZ DOLNY U Fryzjera*ul. Witkiewicza 2, 24-120 Tel 081 881 04 26Road map F4

Located in a former barbershop, this charming restaurant serves Jewish delicacies such as stuffed goose neck, as well as numerous types of pierogi (stuffed pasta). The interior consists of creaky floorboards, barbershop equipment and sepia shots of bygone days. Live klezmer (Yiddish music) performances regularly have the crowds clapping in time.

KAZIMERZ DOLNY Zielona Tawerna*ul. Nadwiślańska 4, 24-120 Tel 081 881 03 08Road map F4

This restaurant specializes in typical, traditional Polish cuisine, and the menu includes an excellent sirloin steak served in a pumpkin shell. The summer garden gets rather crowded on sunny days, while on the inside this white townhouse offers jazz music and a laid-back atmosphere.

LUBLIN Hades*ul. Peowiaków 12, 20-007 Tel 081 532 87 61Road map F4

Housed in a former monastery, Hades is a fashionable restaurant with good cuisine specializing chiefly in Polish delicacies. The menu also includes several original dishes invented by famous guests, as well as a long line of tartar-steak specialities. Club nights and discos are held in a separate area of the restaurant.

LUBLIN Oberża Artystyczna Złoty Osioł*ul. Grodzka 5a, 20-112 Tel 081 532 90 42Road map F4

This restaurant, positioned in the heart of the Old Town, has an intimate interior, bursting with wood and wicker fixtures, where local art exhibitions are frequently held. The dishes have intriguing names, such as "Donkey's Ear" and "Young Breasts", but the waiter will always be willing to offer clarification.

OGRODZIELEC Zamkowy Ogródek*On castle grounds, 42-440 Tel 506 174 038Road map D5

Regional dishes are served in the grounds that surround the ruins of the castle of Ogrodzieniec. The house favourite is the "Breasts of the Castle's Chickens", while at weekends diners can choose from an array of smoked and grilled meats. This is the ideal place for an unusual, scenic summer dinner.

PUŁAWY Willa Cienista*ul. Zielona 23, 24-100 Tel 511 038 361Road map F4

This charming modern villa constructed in Tyrolean style houses a plum-coloured bar supported by timber beams, as well as a nightclub. If your pleasures are less liquid, then the restaurant is a pretty affair with an atmosphere of muted elegance. The menu offers dishes from the Mediterranean and Polish traditions.

ŚWIDNIK Świdniczanka*ul. Niepodległości 7, 21-040 Tel 081 751 29 30Road map F4

A cheap but very popular restaurant with traditional Polish home cooking on offer, as well as a rustic, friendly atmosphere. The Świdnik-style pork chop and carp served in cream are particularly recommended; these and other dishes have the locals coming back for more week after week.

WIĄZOWNA Zajazd u Mikulskich – Mazowsze*ul. Parkingowa 18a, 05-462 Tel 022 780 43 77Road map E3

Located in a mock country mansion, this elegant restaurant features a dining room with wood cabinets and pristine linen arrangements, where bow-tied staff deliver typically traditional Polish dishes to the tables. Those who are not impressed by refined atmospheres will be pleased to know that more basic dining rooms are also available.

ZAMOŚĆ Padwa*ul. Staszica 23, 22-400 Tel 084 638 62 56Road map G5

The name reflects Zamość's former moniker, "Padua of the East", and this grand, brick-walled restaurant is lined with pictures of local celebrities. The main-square location guarantees plenty of tourist traffic, and the menu is a mix of both Polish and Hungarian dishes. Potato pancakes are the chef's speciality.

ZWIERZYNIEC Karczma Młyn*ul. Wachniewskiej 1a, 22-470 Tel 084 687 25 27Road map F5

Although located in the town centre, this beautifully renovated mill has a sedate atmosphere thanks to its proximity to the lake and the many trees that surround it. The menu offers primarily regional food, but the locals claim that the home-made pizzas are the best in the area. Inexpensive accommodation is also available.

CRACOWGreen Wayul. Mikołajska 14, 31-027 Tel 012 431 10 27Road map D5

Part of a Poland-wide chain, this relatively expensive vegetarian fast-food bar has a few tables at the back where diners can enjoy their meat-free snacks in relative comfort. The food is less than adventurous, but with vegetarian options so thin on the ground in this city, the queues at lunchtime can be annoyingly long.

Klezmer Hois

ul. Szeroka 6, 31-053 Tel 012 411 12 45Road map D5

While Klezmer Hois is bold enough to admit that it has no rabbinical certificate of supervision (the Kashrut), it does keep strict standards, and all dishes are kosher, not to mention great value. Enjoy Sabbath soup, shubaha herring and Sephardic salads alongside meaty treats, such as stuffed goose neck.

La Bodega

ul. Sławkowska 12, 31-014 Tel 012 425 49 81Road map D5

At Cracow's best tapas bar, the food is not seen as something that merely gets in the way of the wine. In fact, a wide variety of bite-size portions is available and, if you order it right, you can eat well for a fairly good price. The wine list is what really brings people to this location, however. It is truly outstanding, with something for every pocket.

Pierogarnia

ul. Sławkowska 32, 31-014 Tel 012 422 74 95Road map D5

No visitor to Cracow should leave the city without tasting the Polish speciality pierogi (stuffed pasta), and Pierogarnia is about the best place in town to enjoy that experience. Fillings are innumerable, and these tasty treats can be eaten as a snack or as part of a larger meal. The restaurant also serves other Polish delicacies.

Balaton

ul. Grodzka 37, 31-001 Tel 012 422 04 69Road map D5

The less-than-salubrious setting is redeemed by a delicious menu of specialities from Hungary. Try the Hungarian national dish, goulash, or spicy sausages. Paprika is used in most dishes on the menu, so if you would like your food on the mild side, mention it to your waiter. Reservations are often needed, since Balaton fills up early most evenings.

Chimera

ul. św. Anny 3, 31-011 Tel 012 423 21 78Road map D5

Traditional Polish dishes, including roast pork and lamb, are served on the ground floor of this restaurant, while the salad bar in the basement serves light, healthy food and a wide selection of vegetarian options. Make sure you try one of the home-made fruit liqueurs, a speciality of the restaurant.

Pod Aniołami

ul. Grodzka 35, 31-001 Tel 012 421 39 99Road map D5

This restaurant is located in medieval cellars decorated with a selection of historical objects. The menu features traditional Polish dishes, in particular highlanders' delicacies. You can try oszczyпки (a special kind of cheese prepared by Polish highlanders) or żurek, a rye flour-based soup.

Rooster

ul. Szczepańska 4, 31-011 Tel 012 411 36 72Road map D5

At this excellent American diner-style restaurant, part of a Poland-wide chain, you can choose between grilled meat, pasta dishes and burgers which are Cracow's best. While prices are a little high for what you get, the friendliness of the waiting staff is legendary. The barman makes some fantastic cocktails.

Sukiennice

Rynek Główny 1/3, 31-042 Tel 012 422 24 68Road map D5

In summer, the terrace of this trendy venue on Market Square – set under the colonnades of a fantastic building – is packed out, with live bands performing impromptu sets to delighted diners. If the weather is inclement, head inside, where elegant tables, smooth lighting and simple fusion dishes make this a romantic place for a light meal.

Wentzl

Rynek Główny 19, 31-008 Tel 012 429 57 12Road map D5

Local merchant John Wentzl opened a restaurant here in 1792. Today that place is one of the best eateries in the city. The high ceilings, polished oak floors and outstanding service complement the menu, which is dominated by Czech, Slovak and Hungarian specialities. The wine list ranges from France, Austria and Spain to Chile and South Africa.

Na Wawelu

Wzgórze Wawelskie 9, 31-001 Tel 012 421 19 15Road map D5

This Cracow stalwart is one of the very few restaurants up on Wawel Hill. However, in spite of this lofty location, Na Wawelu manages to avoid being a tourist trap, thanks to its good cuisine and reasonable prices. The menu is made up of mainly Polish favourites, though there are also a few international dishes.

Farina

ul. św. Marka 16, 31-017 Tel 012 422 16 80Road map D5

In this simple, uncluttered restaurant, the bare, highly polished wooden floors and white-washed walls are geared towards focusing the diner's attention on the excellent menu. A successful mix of Polish and Italian dishes brings in crowds of locals and visitors. Reservations are necessary in the evenings.

Grill 15/16

Rynek Główny 16, 31-008 Tel 012 424 96 00Road map D5

Salads, grilled meats and well-mixed cocktails are served in the jungle-like surroundings of a leafy garden behind Market Square. During the summer there is live jazz almost every evening, which brings in a sophisticated crowd. Tables are hard to come by after 7pm, so be sure to make a reservation.

The Olive

ul. Powiśle 7, 31-101 Tel 012 662 10 00

Road map D5

As expensive as any restaurant in Cracow, the Sheraton's showpiece is an award-winning eatery famed for its high-class Mediterranean cuisine. There is a particularly good selection of seafood and fish dishes, and the wine list is pitch-perfect. A glass roof makes dining here in winter a particularly pleasurable experience.

Cyrano de Bergerac

ul. Sławkowska 26, 31-014 Tel 012 411 72 88

Road map D5

If prices here are high, the diners who reserve tables weeks in advance do not seem to mind. This is a world-class French restaurant spread over two elegant rooms, with a quiet patio used in the summer months. The food is exquisite, cooked under the auspices of masterchef Pierre Gallard. Try the garbure soupe béarnaise, made with goose.

MAŁOPOLSKABIELSKO BIAŁA Patria

ul. Wzgórze 19, 43-300 Tel 033 812 24 08

Road map D6

The menu at this restaurant, with its interesting Secessionist interior, features predominantly Polish dishes, but it also offers delicacies from other European countries. The sumptuous and abundant Danie Królewskie (Royal Dish), which consists of three different types of meat served with rice and fruit, is particularly recommended.

BIELSKO BIAŁA Zajazd Klimczok

ul. Bystrzańska 94, 43-309 Tel 033 814 15 67

Road map D6

The decor at this wooden inn is enlivened by a fireplace, animal pelts and formal table arrangements. On the menu are traditional Polish and regional dishes, with Silesian fare dominating. Try the "Woodcutter's Food": potato pies filled with goulash and vegetables. Hotel accommodation is also available in the upstairs quarters.

BRENNA Skalny Dworek

ul. Wyzwolenia 45, 43-438 Tel 033 853 61 16

Road map D6

If you are here in the summer, ask to dine on the pretty terrace, since the restaurant itself offers little more than a droll interior of plastic plants and some timber fixtures. The menu is as you would expect in a chalet building: huge servings of meat and potatoes, cooked with a good degree of competence.

BRZESKO Zajazd Okocim

ul. Wesola 4, 32-800 Tel 014 663 17 61

Road map E5

Located in a converted early 20th-century building, this inn is decorated with paintings from the village of Zalipie. Though no extraordinary gourmet experience, the food is wholesome, cheap and simple. There is a wide choice of Polish dishes, including generous servings of pierogi (stuffed pasta) and Zalipie-style żurek (sour-rye soup).

DWÓR Restauracja Nowina

Road map D6

This award-winning traditional restaurant does more than enough to keep the nearby Chłopskie Jadło (see below) on its toes: for years Nowina was known as one of the top dining spots in the whole region. Owned by a suave, pipe-smoking aristocrat, this restaurant is famed for its great game dishes as well as its rum omelettes.

GŁOGOCZÓW Chłopskie Jadło

Road map D6

A popular restaurant chain serving traditional Polish recipes, with country dishes a speciality. As with all the Chłopskie Jadło ventures across Poland, the Głogoczków branch comes with hams and peppers hanging off turquoise walls, firewood stacked in the corner and bench seating. Their soups are highly recommended.

ŁANCUT Pensjonat Pałacowy

ul. Paderewskiego 18, 37-100 Tel 017 225 20 43

Road map F5

This restaurant is located in a late 19th-century villa and features period interiors and a medley of hunters' trophies. Traditional Polish and regional cuisine is prepared using home-grown produce, and there are even a few Oriental additions on the menu. To enjoy the scenery in all its glory visit in the summer months.

NOWY SĄCZ Panorama

ul. Romanowskiego 6, 33-300 Tel 018 443 75 15

Road map E6

While the interior of this restaurant is rather forgettable, Panorama (as the name suggests) enjoys panoramic views. The real reason for its popularity with the natives, however, is the food: the restaurant has been awarded the prestigious Silver Frying Pan award no fewer than three times.

NOWY SĄCZ Kupiecka

Road map E6

Located in picturesque vaulted cellars, this is a lovely spot to bask by the fireplace and dine by candlelight. Ten out of ten for interiors, and equally high marks for the European and Polish cuisine found on the menu. The golonka (knuckle of pork) in honey is particularly recommended, and this is the perfect spot for dinner for two.

OJCÓW Zajazd ZamazczeOjców 1b, 32-047 Tel 012 389 20 83Road map D5

A chalet-style building with beautifully tended gardens and a dining room with shiny floors that is decorated with promotional brewery signs and a token animal head. The house speciality is "Flaming Trout", though carnivores will be more interested in the "Pig Slaughter Feast", which involves a selection of pork cuts.

RABKA ZDRÓJ Siwy Dymul. Kilińskiego, 34-700 Tel 018 267 66 74Road map D6

The interior of this mountain-style wooden lodge consists of timber tables and the obligatory animal hides, with the staff dressed in traditional local costume. The live music is often excellent, and the owners themselves are known for taking to the stage. The menu revolves mostly around meat, though there are a few options for vegetarians.

SIENIAWA Winiarniaul. Kościuszki 32, 37-530 Tel 016 649 17 00Road map F5

The Baroque former home of the Sieniawski family houses a small hotel and an excellent restaurant. In the elegant dining room, featuring chandeliers and shining floors, the discreet waiting staff ferry plates of Central European food to the tables. There is also a large list of wines available for diners to enjoy.

SUCHA BESKIDZKA Karczma RzymRynek 1, 34-200 Tel 033 874 27 97Road map D6

Head to this traditional inn specializing in hearty local dishes when you are in the mood for a winter warmer. The name derives from the legend of Pan Twardowski, who allegedly crossed the path of the devil at Karczma Rzym; as a tribute to this character, all the dishes on this menu bear devilish names.

TARNÓW PasażPasaż Tertila, 33-100 Tel 014 627 82 78Road map E5

From the outside, Pasaż looks like a slightly shady place, a great shame considering the 18th-century tenement location. Interiors are more classy, with an atmosphere that brings to mind the days of the Habsburg dynasty. Polish recipes like pork with apples and pikeperch San Domingo contribute to making this the best restaurant in town.

ZAKOPANE Czarny Stawul. Krupówki 2, 34-500 Tel 018 201 38 56Road map D6

Meat is cooked on a noisy open grill in the middle of the room, though it is the fish dishes that this place is renowned for; the fish soup is served from a small kettle, and the trout on a fish-shaped wooden board. A górale band plays live music here every day.

ZAKOPANE U Wnukaul. Kościeliska 52, 34-500 Tel 018 206 61 47Road map D6

Excellent highlanders' dishes are served in small rooms in this 150-year-old wooden house. The kwaśnica (a sour soup typical of the region), the lamb with fried cabbage and the spare ribs are particularly delicious – and reasonably priced, too. A highlanders' band provides live music at weekends.

ZAKOPANE Bąkowo Zohylinaul. Piłsudskiego 6, 34-500 Tel 018 206 62 16Road map D6

Set in a converted barn surrounded by fir trees off the road to the ski jump, this traditional restaurant boasts a great atmosphere. Dance to traditional music under the cauldron dangling from the ceiling in the middle of the room, and enjoy the excellent goulash, venison filet and fresh trout. Most evenings feature yodelling mountain bands.

ZAKOPANE Dworek Bawarskiul. Bogdańskiego 5, 34-500 Tel 018 206 65 11Road map D6

This restaurant, housed in a beautiful lodge on the edge of the forest on the Giewont trail, serves classic Bavarian dishes, including Strudel, along with foaming Steins of German beer. The dining hall features a stone fireplace with a bear's head glowing down from above. A great atmosphere is guaranteed.

SILESIACZECHOWICE-DZIEDZICE Ristul. Brzeziny 4, 43-502 Tel 032 214 26 48Road map D6

Rist's elegant dining room features chandeliers and painstaking linen arrangements. You will pay far more than in most other local restaurants, but the high-end offerings, such as New Zealand lamb and roe deer, are worth the splurge. The restaurant also specializes in Silesian dishes, including dumplings stuffed with cabbage leaves.

CZELADŹ Calvadosul. Bytomska 30, 41-254 Tel 032 763 60 17Road map D5

Head to Calvados for a Mediterranean menu with several seafood options. The maritime interior is designed to look like a galleon, and the place is regularly packed to the rafters with locals, who seem to enjoy dining amid the rigging and lanterns, while the busy staff rush around keeping control of the crowds.

GLIWICE Spichlerz*ul. Wiejska 16b, 44-121 Tel 032 305 24 52Road map D5

Located inside a converted granary building, this gorgeous restaurant features original details like brick walls and exposed beams. In spite of offering top-class meals, the atmosphere is far from formal. Start with the mushroom soup, served inside a loaf of bread, before moving on to generous plates of wild boar and deer.

KATOWICE A Dong*ul. Matejki 3, 40-077 Tel 032 258 66 62Road map D5

Decorated with the requisite paper lanterns, A Dong offers diners a thick menu with an extensive choice of Chinese and Vietnamese dishes. Meals range from eel Saigon-style to stuffed chicken wings in a sweet and sour sauce. A take-away service is also available, and the restaurant has sister branches in Gliwice and Sosnowiec.

MIĘDZYGÓRZE Willa Millenium*ul. Wojska Polskiego 9, 57-514 Tel 074 813 52 87Road map B5

A charming white building, not unlike a Swiss chalet, is the setting for this restaurant. The interiors are slightly disappointing, with crass additions such as plastic sunflowers, paper napkins and a calendar featuring women in suggestive poses by the bar area. Fortunately, the menu boasts good local food, especially the Galician-style trout.

PSZCZYNA Frykówka*Rynek, 43-200 Tel 032 449 00 20Road map D6

Housed inside an 18th-century tenement building, Frykówka is an attractive space. Diners consume their meals under vaulted ceilings and the watchful eye of the nobility pictured in the paintings on the wall. The wine list is extensive and the menu combines traditional Polish fare, local Silesian dishes and a number of Italian options.

WISŁA Niby Nic*ul. 1 Maja 61, 43-460 Tel 033 855 22 38Road map D6

A pleasant restaurant with a scarlet colour scheme and framed photos, Niby Nic is situated on the town's main promenade. The menu features Polish and European dishes – all cooked, apparently, to old, traditional recipes. The "Duck à la Ski-Jumper" is named in honour of local skiing hero Adam Malysz.

WROCLAW La Luz*ul. Kraińskiego 14, 50-153 Tel 661927476Road map C4

In the past you had to travel to Warsaw to enjoy decent Mexican food, but the arrival of La Luz mean that this is no longer the case. Indeed, this restaurant looks set on changing the conservative dining habits of the locals. The owners stress that this is Mexican food prepared Californian-style, all done inside the trendy interior of a medieval tower.

WROCLAW Sakana*ul. Odrzańska 17/1a, 50-113 Tel 071 343 37 10Road map C4

This restaurant is owned by the same team behind the best sushi stop in the capital. Wrocław's version of Sakana is equally good, the only difference being that this venture is actually larger than the Warsaw branch. Once more, the food floats around a circular bar on paper boats, eagerly consumed by a young and fashionable crowd.

WROCLAW Art Restauracja i Kawiarnia*ul. Kielbaśnicza 20, 50-110 Tel 071 787 71 02Road map C4

The Art Hotel is one of the best hotels in town, so it comes as no surprise to hear that that quality extends to the kitchen. Descend to the basement to find a vaulted brick cellar decorated with murals of town scenes. The menu changes with the seasons and sees the chef experimenting with recipes from a wide range of European countries.

WROCLAW Le Bistro Parisien*ul. Nozownicza 1d, 50-119 Tel 071 343 76 98Road map C4

A foggy atmosphere and walls decorated with a collection of artistic photos and clippings taken from the French press create a convincingly Parisian atmosphere. This is a superb spot to while away a lazy evening. The menu includes a recommended range of pancakes, as well as more filling options. All are worth considering.

WROCLAW Czwartkowa and Królewska*Rynek 5, 50-106 Tel 071 372 48 96Road map C4

No expense has been spared on the interiors, which consist of three vaulted halls designed to evoke the glory days of the Habsburg Empire. Decorated with swish drapes and oil paintings, this classy restaurant offers a menu that includes high-brow interpretations of Polish and Central European dishes; the game offerings are especially recommended.

WROCLAW Karczma Lwowska*Rynek 4, 50-106 Tel 071 343 98 87Road map C4

Found inside a historical building on the market square, Karczma Lwowska is all dark, gloomy woods paired with luridly yellow tablecloths and black-and-white pictures of Wrocław's twin town, Lwów. The food, however, is surprisingly good – and liberally priced, considering the location – with several notable grill dishes to choose from.

WROCLAW Spiz*Rynek Ratusz 2, 50-106 Tel 071 344 72 25Road map C4

This venture is split into two rooms: a microbrewery with huge copper vats and a formal dining room. The service is not fast, but you will be treated to outstanding home-brewed beer, as well as a menu that features Argentinian beef and saddle of lamb among Polish choices. The restaurant section is popular with an older crowd.

WROCLAW Piano Bar Casablancaul. Włodkowska 8a, 50-072 Tel 071 344 78 17Road map C4

One of the most revered restaurants in town (and one popular with local celebrities) is inside a building decorated with North African rugs, shabby and framed pictures of Humphrey Bogart. The garden outside feels a world away from the frantic flutter of central Wrocław, and the menu offers a blend of local and Mediterranean dishes.

WROCLAW Splendioul. Świdnicka 53, 50-030 Tel 071 344 77 77Road map C3

One of Wrocław's best choices, provided you're willing to part with cash. Interiors are cluttered with exposed beams, vases of flowers and lampshades, and the menu is a collection of Mediterranean dishes. The seafood is especially noteworthy, with a superb sea bass prepared in balsamic sauce. The exclusive Vulevu Club is found in the basement.

WIELKOPOLSKAGRABOWNO DworekNear Miasteczko Krajeńskie, 89-350 Tel 067 287 41 28Road map C2

This rambling manor house is home to an excellent restaurant decorated with antiques that also doubles as an art gallery. The menu contains a vast selection of Polish and Lithuanian delights, as well as a number of vegetarian options. The kolduny (dumplings stuffed with meat) are highly recommended.

IWNO Zajazd Podbiętaul. Gnieźnieńska 2, near Kostrzyń Wielkopolski, 62-025 Tel 061 817 84 23Road map C3

Proving that not all Polish 70s architecture is bad, this is a picturesque roadhouse serving good, inexpensive meals. Foodies from Poznań and elsewhere come here to enjoy the "family joint of pork", which feeds up to four people. For starters, try the house speciality, żurek soup served inside a large bun.

JAROCIN Gościniec Walcerekul. Poznańska 73, 63-200 Tel 062 747 28 18Road map C3

A chalet-style guesthouse with a curious mix of classy touches, such as chandeliers and a piano, and cheap-looking fittings, like stone cladding. The alcohol selection is vast and paired well with the rich meat offerings. Gościniec Walcerek offers cheap and cheerful Polish cuisine at its finest, with a quiet outdoor terrace to retire to afterwards.

ŁÓDŹ Ciągoty i Tęsknotyul. Wojska Polskiego 144a, 91-711 Tel 042 650 87 94Road map D4

One of the few restaurants in Łódź that could survive in a more competitive environment. Tracking it down may lead to adventure, but intrepid diners will be rewarded with a superb ambience, not too different from a French country kitchen. Multilingual waiters take the orders and deliver high-quality meals, such as chicken in lemon sauce.

ŁÓDŹ Anatewkaul. 6 Sierpnia 2/4, 90-422 Tel 042 630 36 35Road map D4

A restaurant that harks back to the day when Łódź was known for its large Jewish population. The decor includes menorahs, framed pictures of old Łódź and even a couple of mannequins sporting prayer shawls and Hassidic locks. Superb staff deliver dishes like duck served in cherry sauce while klezmer (Yiddish) music plays in the background.

POZNAŃ Bee Jay'sStary Rynek 87, 61-772 Tel 061 853 11 15Road map C3

Bee Jay's boasts a main-square location and a menu that surprises with each turn of the page. You will find burgers on one page, Mexican on the next, and Indian on the following. Perhaps even more surprising is that the ethnic food is pretty good, a real bonus in such a gastronomically conservative town. Big-screen live sports spice things up.

POZNAŃ Sushi Jazz SarpStary Rynek 56, 61-772 Tel 061 853 24 64Road map C3

A hyper-modern space that comes with a sushi bar, a non-smoking policy and some of the best jazz performances in the city. Poznań's movers and shakers love this place, and it is not surprising. Images of Poznań in its pre-war golden glory are projected on to the walls, while expert bar staff are adept at mixing beautiful and tasty cocktails.

POZNAŃ BrovariaStary Rynek 73/74, 61-772 Tel 061 858 68 68Road map C3

Brovaria consists of a hotel, a restaurant and a microbrewery – all under one roof and each winning praise for excellence. The chic restaurant offers beautifully presented dishes served on square plates. Try the veal stuffed with chicken and veal mousse, before finishing off with cocktails at the impressive steel-and-glass bar.

POZNAŃ Dom VikingówStary Rynek 62, 61-772 Tel 061 852 71 53Road map C3

At this complex of bars and restaurants, you can choose to sit in the Whisky Bar, watch the match in the Sports Pub, drink and dine in a separate chic bar, or move upstairs to the top-of-the-range restaurant. A minimal Scandinavian design unifies the different areas, while the menu features Danish dishes, Indian curries and Argentinian beef.

POZNAŃ Le Palais du JardinStary Rynek 37, 61-772 Tel 061 665 85 85Road map C3

Another excellent dining experience, this one with a main-square location directly across from the town hall. The Palais has won numerous awards for excellence, and the menu is little less than nouvelle cuisine at its finest. The owner is a self-confessed wine buff, a fact reflected in the extensive wine list.

POZNAŃ Wielkopolska Zagrodaul. Fredry 12, 61-701 Tel 061 665 88 00Road map C3

A huge restaurant serving big portions of Polish classics in a rustic locale stuffed with miscellaneous rural touches. Choose from specialities that range from pancakes with apples and cinnamon to rich dishes like pork chops in cranberry sauce. A whole section of the menu is dedicated to the signature Polish dish, pierogi (stuffed pasta).

POZNAŃ Delicjapl. Wolności 5, 61-738 Tel 061 852 11 28Road map C3

Twice named Poland's restaurant of the year by American Express magazine, this is one of the most famous dining rooms in Poznań, with elegant interiors containing marble columns and ticking clocks. The menu is a mix of Polish, Italian and French delicacies, cooked by a team of award-winning chefs. In summer don't miss a visit to the garden.

POZNAŃ BażanciarniaStary Rynek 94, 61-773 Tel 061 855 33 59Road map C3

The property of celebrity restaurateur Magda Gessler, Bażanciarnia boasts a dining room that has been designed to look like the banquet hall of an eccentric aristocrat: flowers and fruit stand on the shelves, while paintings of pheasants adorn the walls. The game dishes are superb and regarded as some of the best in the city.

GDAŃSKChata Chłopskaul. Gielguda 4, 80-207 Tel 058 524 00 95Road map D1

Local diners flock to this thatched lodge located just outside the fringes of the Old Town to eat vast portions of meat dishes and hoist their beers in the air. The rustic interiors prove a great escape from downtown Gdańsk's more formal eateries, and the menu provides a great whistle-stop tour of traditional Polish food.

Pierogarnia u Dzikaul. Piwna 59/60, 80-831 Tel 058 305 26 76Road map D1

Boar pelts and animal heads cheer up a peach-coloured interior, but design issues should be overlooked by anyone who appreciates good, inexpensive food. As the name suggests, pierogi (stuffed pasta) are the speciality here, and there is a vast collection of fillings to choose from: from meat and cabbage to seasonal offerings such as fresh fruit.

Pizzeria Margheritaul. Cystersów 11, 80-330 Tel 058 552 37 16Road map D1

Do not be put off by the suburban location: this pleasant restaurant serves 28 types of pizza – allegedly the best in Gdańsk – at competitive prices. This is a good stop if you find yourself touring around the district of Oliwa; if not, you will be pleased to hear that they also deliver across the city. Ideal for those on a tight budget.

Trattoria La Primaveraul. Grobla 13, 80-840 Tel 058 305 15 25Road map D1

Though furnished in a rather impersonal style, La Primavera excels in preparing above-standard Italian fare. Dishes such as turkey with artichokes and olives are prepared by a chef who has clearly been studying his or her cookbook thoroughly. Highly recommended, with some good seafood dishes as well.

Kubickiul. Wartka 5, 80-841 Tel 058 301 00 50Road map D1

Founded in 1919, this legendary restaurant is still in the hands of the same family. The interiors are full of interesting old furniture, while the food is typical of traditional Polish port cities, with a good selection of starters and an excellently prepared fried trout. Make sure you leave some room for the delicious cheesecake.

Tawerna Mestwinul. Straganiarska 21/22, 80-837 Tel 058 301 78 82Road map D1

Time stands still in Tawerna Mestwin, a restaurant serving traditional Kashubian cuisine, which amounts to tasty offerings of hunks of meat. Staffed by a friendly team of golden oldies, this spot is crammed with enough local arts and crafts to make you think you are visiting an ethnographic museum. Excellent fare at low prices.

A highly lauded restaurant situated in the basement of a town-council building. The attractive interiors are filled with flowers and theatrical touches, while the menu features all the dishes ever committed to paper by the local-born German author Günther Grass. The wine list is one of the best and most extensive in the region.

VNS

al. Grunwaldzka 82 (4th floor, Manhattan Shopping Centre), 80-244 Tel 058 767 79 00

Road map D1

Shopping-mall dining has been completely reinvented. Forget about stopping for a fast-food burger, VNS is a class act with a designer look generated by skylights, a piano stage and a clean-cut interior. The menu is like any other you would find in an international restaurant, though dishes like duck in honey prove to be divine.

Pod Łososiem

ul. Szeroka 52/54, 80-835 Tel 058 301 76 52

Road map D1

Luminaries such as George Bush Sr and Pope John Paul II have dined in this opulent setting. The name means "under the salmon", and grilled salmon is, indeed, the house speciality here, though guests should also keep an eye on the game dishes. This historic building originally housed the first Goldwasser vodka distillery in the city.

Restauracja w Pałacu Opatów

ul. Cystersów 18, 80-333 Tel 058 524 56 99

Road map D1

This wonderful restaurant in the shadow of the Oliwa cathedral offers fine dining at its best. A maître d' escorts diners to the tables, which are spread out over three rooms elegantly decorated in the style of an aristocrat's retreat. The menu changes with each season, and the blini with caviar are perfect for small appetites.

POMERANIA

BOROWO Checz Rybacka

ul. Jeziorna 2, 83-332 Tel 058 685 34 04

Road map D1

This restaurant serves the best fish in Poland, and it has won several awards to support this claim. Located in a modern detached home, Checz Rybacka features a pleasant green interior, while the menu boasts a carp-based speciality that attracts foodies from far and wide.

BOROWO Tatiana

ul. Gdańska 30, 83-332 Tel 502986802

Road map D1

Excellent Russian cuisine is served in an interior complete with pre-Revolution-style traditional murals. The menu runs the full range of Russian classics, including crab soup and wide variety of pielmieni, the Russian take on pierogi (stuffed pasta). The well-tended garden is a great option for summer dining.

BYTÓW Zamek

ul. Zamkowa 2, 77-100 Tel 059 822 20 94

Road map C1

Set inside a 14th-century castle, Zamek invites diners to feast on dishes such as the "Knight's Platter of Meat" or the "Knight's Cauldron", a spicy goulash that is perfect for winter days. The rutabega soup is a great starter based on goose broth. The awesome surroundings are best viewed in summer, when the restaurant garden is open.

GDYNIA Etnica

ul. Abrahama 46, 80-387 Tel 058 661 91 26

Road map D1

This huge venue is divided into a restaurant, a café and a bar. The bistro part features a modern violet design, and though the sheer size means that staff are often overwhelmed, this remains a commendable spot. As the name implies, Etnica presents a variety of world cuisine from Georgian to Cuban to Indonesian dishes.

GDYNIA Pueblo

Road map D1

HEL Maszoperia

ul. Wiejska 110, 84-150 Tel 058 675 02 97

Road map D1

Primarily a fish bar, Maszoperia also has a range of Kashubian specialities on offer. The salmon is the pride of the proprietor and is served with a variety of sauces to choose from. Within easy access of the sea, this restaurant is housed in a low-ceilinged fisherman's cottage typical of the early 19th century.

JASTRZĘBIA GÓRA Kredens

ul. Kaszubska 1, 84-104 Tel 058 674 95 81

Road map D1

If you have visited Warsaw, you may already be familiar with the Kredens chain. If not, expect a vast menu composed of typical bar food, high-end Polish recipes and well-prepared European foods. The interior is designed to recreate a fisherman's cabin, and it is decorated with fishing nets, ship lanterns and an antique globe.

MALBORK Zamkowa

ul. Starościńska 14 Tel 055 272 27 38

Road map D1

This large restaurant with a knightly theme is located in the rebuilt wings of the castle outbuildings. The menu serves up traditional Polish cuisine, including a dish called "Castle Soup" – in reality, this is more of a beef goulash, accompanied with olives and capers. A good stop to regenerate the spirits after a day spent touring Malbork castle.

MIĘDZYDROJE Marina

ul. Gryfa Pomorskiego 1, 72-500 Tel 091 328 04 49

Road map A1

A small, attractive hotel with a restaurant serving a combination of Polish and Mediterranean cuisine. The elegant interiors are decorated with velvet drapes and strings of sausages and hams hanging from behind the bar. The pikeperch baked in brandy and wine and served with garlic and parsley is the house speciality.

MIELNO Meduza

ul. Nadbrzeżna 2, 76-032 Tel 094 348 08 90

Road map B1

SASINO Ewa Zaprasza

ul. Morska 49, 84-212 Tel 058 676 33 39

Road map C1

Considered one of the best restaurants in the country, Ewa Zaprasza touts a homely atmosphere with bookshelves and typewriters dotted around the dining area. The duck with apples is the signature dish, and one that cannot be recommended highly enough. Visit the place at its seasonal best, when the summer garden is open. Closed Dec.

SŁUPSK Zamkowa

ul. Dominikańska 7, 84-101 Tel 059 842 04 79

Road map C1

This restaurant is considered the best in and around Słupsk, even though the interior is rather severe. On the menu are typical Kashubian dishes, including nut soup with meatballs. There is also a distinct emphasis on fish, with the "Głębia Wód" (Depth of the Waters), a platter of three fish from the Baltic, coming particularly recommended.

SMOŁDZINO Gościniec pod Rowokolem

ul. Bohaterów Warszawy 26, 76-214 Tel 059 848 60 40

Road map C1

A picturesque inn serving simple renditions of regional and traditional Polish dishes, with house specialities including pierogi (stuffed pasta) and golonka (knuckle of pork). The restaurant is decorated with garish local handicrafts that sometimes push the realm of good taste, but the food and warm welcome act as a counterbalance. Closed Oct–Mar.

SOPOT Klub Wieloryb

Road map D1

Ring the doorbell to gain entrance and then take your time to admire the grotto-like interior. Submarine engines, grotesque sculptures and other decorative oddities will leave your mind spinning. The menu is French-influenced, with offerings like pork in curry sauce. A meal here will prove to be one of the best in the region.

SOPOT Rucola

ul. Poniałowskiego 8, 81-777 Tel 058 551 50 46

Road map D1

Occupying a spot in the basement of the Museum of Sopot, this restaurant is an attractive space with black-and-white tiling and linen-covered seating. The menu offers a small selection of Polish dishes, but the restaurant is especially renowned for its Mediterranean dishes. Try the lemon soup.

SOPOT Baolla II

ul. Grunwaldzka 27, 81-758 Tel 058 551 58 41

Road map D1

Tucked discreetly away from Sopot's neon lights, this restaurant can be found inside a small cottage building, with a tiny garden for summer dining. Unpainted wood furniture and items of wacky art create an informal setting that proves popular with families. The excellent menu offers experimental versions of both local and European dishes.

SOPOT Rozmaryn

ul. Ogrodowa 8, 81-759 Tel 058 551 11 04

Road map D1

A charming cottage-style building hides a disappointingly dull interior, but that should not act as a deterrent to visit Rozmaryn. This is lauded as the best Italian restaurant in the Tri-City region, and rightly so. The menu changes each month, but the seafood, especially the fish soup, is renowned across the city.

SOPOT Villa Baltica

ul. Emilii Plater 1, 81-777 Tel 058 555 28 00

Road map D1

This stand-out restaurant located a short walk from the beach is attached to the luxurious hotel of the same name. It comes with a clean cream colour scheme, interesting pieces of modern art and soft music playing in the background. The menu ranges from light snack options to more substantial dishes, such as boar.

STRZYŻAWA Jermir

Road map C2

This motel restaurant has a rather stale design but is worth visiting for the outstanding food. The menu offers Polish and European meals, and diners should order the jermierski pieróg (a rolled loin of pork stuffed with rice, raisins and dried prunes). If the interior is too depressing, check out the huge garden in good weather.

TORUŃ Gromada

ul. Żeglarska 10/14, 87-100 Tel 056 622 60 60

Road map D2

A hotel restaurant with a rather outdated design but some very good food to quell any original misconceptions. The menu revolves around typical Old Polish cuisine, including tripe and zurek soup. The potato dumplings served in czernina (soup made with duck blood and chicken broth) is a particularly impressive dish.

AUGUSTÓW HetmanV ul. Sportowa 1, 16-303 Tel 087 644 53 45Road map F2

Situated right on the banks of Lake Necko is this recently renovated stone building originally dating from 1939, it is the Polish dishes on the menu that really draw diners here. The kotlet Hetmański is this restaurant's secret weapon: a delicious combination of sirloin steak and chicken fillet served as one. Hetman also doubles as a hotel.

BIAŁOWIEŻA Żubrówka  V ul. O. Gabiec 6, 17-230 Tel 085 681 23 03Road map G3

This hotel restaurant specializes in game dishes, and what is on the menu on a particular day depends entirely on the results of the hunt. If it is available, try the saddle of deer in cherry sauce, layered with pears and served on a crisp potato pancake. As expected, a hunting theme dominates, with stuffed animals at every turn.

BIAŁYSTOK Cristal  V ul. Lipowa 3 Tel 085 742 93 64Road map F2

This long-established popular restaurant is famous for its Polish cuisine, although the menu also features food from several other countries – France, in particular. The pork sirloin stuffed with nuts and cheese is a well-known crowd-pleaser. The Old Town location adds to the appeal of this local legend.

ŁAWA Kormoran  V ul. Chodkiewicza 3, 14-200 Tel 089 648 26 77Road map D2

Kormoran is situated by the lake, overlooking a beautiful landscape, which compensates for the severity of the decor. The fish dishes deserve special attention, and much of the menu rests on the results of the daily catch. The fried pikeperch always seems to be available, though, and is highly recommended. A European menu is also popular.

KĘTRZYN Zajazd Pod Zamkiem  V ul. Struga 3a, 11-400 Tel 089 752 31 17Road map E1

This charismatic restaurant is situated next to the walls of a Teutonic castle, making garden dining an attractive proposition in warm weather. The menu is an unusual but successful combination of traditional Polish grilled meats and Chinese dishes. A pleasant inn can be found in the same building.

KRUTYŃ Krutynianka   V Near Pieklich, 11-710 Tel 089 742 12 19Road map E2

Krutynianka is the first restaurant in the Mazuria region to serve traditional, local dishes, so this is just the place to head for if you have never tried nettle soup. The terrace is situated just metres from the river, and not surprisingly, the menu also features a wide range of freshwater fish.

MIKOŁAJKI Malaj Kino V Plac Wolności 10, 11-730 Tel 087 421 61 60Road map E2

MŁYN IDZBARSKI Młyn Pod Mariaszkiem   Near Ostróda, 14-100 Tel 089 646 03 55Road map E2

At this beautifully renovated 19th-century mill on the Gdańsk-Warsaw highway, the ceiling is supported with huge wooden beams. Local artwork, colourful tablecloths and a piano add to the cluttered charm. The menu has excellent piezogi (stuffed pasta), as well as home-made bread and cakes. Wash it down with a glass of birch juice.

OLSZTYN Przyszań   V ul. Żeglarska 2, 10-160 Tel 089 523 77 79Road map E2

With a beautiful location on the banks of Lake Krzywe and outside tables in the summer, Przyszań specializes in fish- and wild mushroom-based dishes. Of particular note are the sturgeon fillets in crab sauce or in fresh dill and cream sauce. The menu also offers several vegetarian choices.

RYN Karczma u Wallenroda V pl. Wolności 3a, 11-520 Tel 087 421 86 75Road map E2

In this plain brick building with dark furnishings and a gloomy atmosphere, a log fire brightens up proceedings. The kitchen is the source of a variety of grilled meats and other such carnivorous offerings. The bar area houses a billiard table, and accommodation can be found upstairs.

TOLMICKO Stara Gorzelnia  V Near Kadyny, 82-340 Tel 055 231 61 20Road map D1

Stara Gorzelnia is situated in what was once Kaiser Wilhelm's personal vodka distillery, with the surrounding grounds featuring what is reputed to be the oldest oak tree in Poland. The restaurant is a large, upmarket affair, and the menu has everything from roast beef with Yorkshire pudding to fondue sets. Completely recommended.

SHOPPING IN POLAND

Poland is known first and foremost for its handcraft goods. Polish silver and amber jewellery are especially renowned, but hand-embroidered tablecloths, cut glass from Silesia, porcelain from Ćmielów and ceramics from Bolesławiec are also very popular. Thick, hand-knitted woollen sweaters and ornamented leather slippers are produced by the highlanders of Zakopane and its environs. CDs and cassettes of Polish classical and contemporary music are available all over the country. Large-format, lavishly illustrated books of the Polish landscape and on art, some of which are published in English, French or German, are other tempting souvenirs of a visit to Poland.

Amber jewellery and other goods displayed in a shop window

WHERE TO SHOP

Although there are retail shops everywhere, it often makes more sense to purchase goods from factory and established licensed shops. The most competitively priced handcraft goods can be bought direct from the manufacturers in the markets. Duty-free goods are also available at Warsaw airport.

SHOPPING IN WARSAW

Most shops are located in the city centre. There are many elegant boutiques in the Old Town, along Ulica Krakowskie Przedmieście and Ulica Nowy Świat. There are many clothes shops in Ulica Chmielna, Aleje Jerozolimskie and Ulica Marszałkowska. If you are interested in antiques visit the Sunday morning market in the Koło district on the western side of Warsaw.

Popular department stores are Galeria Centrum, Galeria

Mokotów, Arkadia, Wola Park and City Center. Large shopping centres such as Reduta and Promenada are located away from the main tourist areas, while Klif is smaller and close to the centre. Browsing for bargains is an attraction of large markets, for example those held in Plac Defilad, or Jarmark Saski bazaar in the east of Warsaw.

OPENING HOURS

Shops are open from 10am to 6pm Monday to Friday and, in the main, from 10am to 2pm on Saturdays. In the larger cities, shops usually close at 7pm, with most of the department stores staying open for an extra hour and closing at 8pm.

In the run-up to Christmas, the majority of shops are open much longer hours, and shopping centres open on the last Sunday before Christmas. Normal Sunday opening times are restricted to a few food shops and major shopping centres, although in summer souvenir shops in popular tourist resorts open as well.

On public holidays all shops are closed, with the exception of some pharmacies and food shops (those that are open at night). As a last resort, a 24-hour petrol station may fulfil any particularly pressing needs.

PAYING

Although cash (in złote, of course) is always welcomed by Polish traders of all kinds, credit cards are nonetheless accepted in most shops in the big cities (this should be indicated by stickers on the door – if not, ask before making a purchase).

However, small shops sometimes prefer to give a small discount for payment in cash rather than take a card, so there may be a little margin for haggling. Polish shops do not usually accept travellers' cheques, but it is perfectly easy to change them in banks (see pp.348–9). There is VAT on the price of Polish goods, but a range of goods is tax free to foreign nationals, and on such goods (minimum value 200 PLN) a VAT refund can be obtained.

Klif, one of Warsaw's main shopping centres

BOOKS AND RECORDS

Well-stocked bookshops can be found in most towns and cities. The EMPIK chain of bookshops, with outlets in all big cities, offers the widest choice, and not only of books; there are music and CD-ROM sections as well. Guidebooks in foreign languages and glossy coffee-table books aimed at the tourist market are available from tourist information centres. Many secondhand bookshops, to be found in the old parts of big cities, often stock an interesting selection of old books.

Highlanders' sweaters and other local goods at a Zakopane market

HANDICRAFTS

Traditional handicraft products such as hand-woven tapestries, embroidered tablecloths and doilies, leather goods, decorative cut-outs, ceramics and even furniture are sold in Cepelia shops, which are to be found in all big cities. In Cracow, most of these shops are located in the Sukiennice in Main Market Square. In Gdańsk, the retail outlet Sklep Kaszubski specializes in artifacts made by folk artists from Kashubia. Local markets are also worth visiting. For example, one of the best places to buy highlanders' sweaters is at the market in Zakopane; embroidered tablecloths are on sale at stalls in Święta Lipka and Kashubian ceramics in pottery workshops in Chmielno.

AMBER GOODS

Amber is a fossilized tree resin that ranges in colour from cream through translucent yellow and orange to rich brown. Most Polish amber comes from the Gulf of Gdańsk, and Polish amber goods are largely made in Gdańsk and its environs.

Amber jewellery is extremely popular in Poland. It is sold at a range of outlets, but to avoid the risk of buying a fake it is best to go to an established shop. In Gdańsk there are several such shops, located chiefly in the Old City, particularly in Ulica Mariacka and Ulica Długie Pobrzeże – for example in M&M, the Nord Amber Gallery and the Wydra Gallery. The town of Mikotałki in the Great Mazurian Lakes region also offers a wide choice of amber artifacts.

MODERN ART

Some of the greatest attractions for tourists in Poland are contemporary paintings, prints and posters, which are available at very reasonable prices in galleries. Art galleries also sell original glass, ceramics and designer jewellery. Silver, in the form of sophisticated jewellery and various other artifacts, is relatively cheap.

Painting on glass also has a strong tradition in Poland, and small pieces, with traditional or modern designs, are offered for sale in many galleries around the country.

In Wrocław, the former meat market in Kiełbaśnicza has been taken over by artists. In Cracow, there are many galleries in the historic city centre – for example, Kocioł Artystyczny. In Warsaw there is Zapiecek and Art Gallery ZPAP (Union of Polish Artists and Designers). There are small private galleries in many towns, even the smaller ones, and prices there are, as one might expect, usually lower than in Warsaw. All in all, the Polish arts and crafts scene is a thriving one, providing the visitor with a wide range of work at attractive prices.

Baskets for sale at the market in Sokółka

ANTIQUES

In most towns throughout Poland, antiques and collectables are sold in Desa shops. Second-hand goods, however, are sold in privately run shops that are to be found in both large and small towns and also in tourist spots. Visitors should bear in mind that there are special provisions pertaining to the export of objects made before 1945; under Polish customs regulations, such objects may not be exported, unless a special permit is obtained.

POTTERY AND PORCELAIN

Poland has a long tradition of porcelain manufacture, and there are a few factories that still produce porcelain in both traditional and modern designs. The most renowned type is Ćmielów porcelain, which is available all over Poland. Just as attractive is the porcelain produced by the factory in Wałbrzych, which has its own retail shop situated in Książ Castle (see p185). Popular also are traditional ceramics such as those made in Bolesławiec, especially the white and navy-blue crockery decorated with spots, circles and small stylized flowers.

GLASS AND CRYSTAL

High-quality glass, in both modern and traditional designs, is another Polish speciality, as is traditional cut glass, known as crystal. Designer glassware is also popular and in great demand. The most beautiful cut glass

Gdański Bówka, a shop in Gdańsk selling all sorts of souvenirs comes from Silesia, where glass production dates back to the 14th century. The Julia glass factory in Szklarska Poręba, which was established in 1841 as Josephinenhütte, is also renowned.

Wedel, one of Warsaw's smartest sweet shops

CLOTHES AND ACCESSORIES

Poland has never been synonymous with high-quality clothing, but in recent years the quality of clothes made in Poland has greatly improved, and many factories can now compete with Western European clothing manufacturers. Shirts from Wólczanka, suits from Bytom and coats from Próchnik are in demand. They are available in department stores and from shops in big cities. Many Polish designers also have their own boutiques, which stock unique collections of suits and dresses.

Poland is well known for its high-quality leather goods, such as bags, belts and wallets. In Warsaw, Andrzej Kloda's shop at the end of Krakowskie Przedmieście and Maciej Batycki's shop on Ulica Złota, are well worth a visit.

FOOD AND DRINK

Polish liquor is internationally renowned, especially the pure vodkas, which – much like Scotch whisky – are available in a bewildering range of varieties. The most popular brands are Premium and Chopin, the latter sold in elegant, slender bottles decorated with a picture of the famous composer.

Another popular spirit is zubrówka, a vodka with a distinctive, slightly herbal flavour; it is obtained from hierchloe grass, which grows only in the Białowieśka Forest. Another alcoholic drink is mead. Made with honey according to traditional recipes, it is the perfect accompaniment to desserts.

Many distilleries have their own retail outlets, where private buyers can taste the different specialities on offer. Such an establishment is Polmos, in Cracow.

Polish sweets are of a high quality. Chocolates made by the Warsaw firm Wedel and the Cracow firm Wawel are particularly esteemed.

A tasty present from Poland could be, for instance, a jar of dried ceps (porcini mushrooms), honey, smoked eel or dried sausage. The best places to buy such items are bazaars and markets. There are good markets in Warsaw in Hala Mirowska near Plac Mirowski, in Cracow in Stary Kleparz, in Poznań in Plac Wielkopolski, and in the market halls of Wrocław and Gdańsk.

If travelling to the UK, avoid fish or meat products as they are subject to an import ban.

What to Buy in Poland

Folk carvings

The range of folk art and handicrafts in Poland is truly impressive. Almost every region has its own speciality. The production of Christmas tree ornaments, painted Easter eggs and Christmas crib figures is a distinctive folk industry. The work of Polish artists, in the form of paintings, prints, posters and sculpture, is also highly esteemed and can be found in commercial galleries. Designer jewellery, another high-profile Polish craft, and amber products, which are reasonably priced, are also attractive. Vodka, the national drink, is available in various flavours.

HIGHLANDERS' PRODUCTS

The Podhale region is famous for its original folk products. The hand-knitted socks and sweaters and the traditional leather kierpce (soft shoes with pointed toes) are very popular.

Christmas Cribs

Christmas cribs are extremely popular, especially in southern Poland. The finest are hand-carved in wood. As well as a whole crib, it is possible to purchase individual figures.

Easter Decorations

Easter eggs and lambs are essential on the Easter table. Not only are the eggs painted, but patterns are also created by scratching into the shell and applying paper and ribbons.

Christmas Decorations

Traditional Polish Christmas decorations range from painted glass balls to ornaments made of wood, straw, paper or coloured ribbons.

Gingercake

Gingercake, a traditional delicacy from Toruń, is made using old moulds and is sometimes decorated with colourful frosting.

FOLK ART

Folk art is deeply rooted in Polish tradition. It takes many forms – from painting, carving and embroidery to other skilled handicrafts. Painting on glass is a particularly vibrant aspect of the genre.

Jewellery

Silver jewellery is a speciality of Polish craftsmen. It is relatively cheap and comes in a variety of sophisticated modern designs.

Amber

Amber artifacts epitomize Polish craftsmanship. The translucent material is turned into original jewellery and ornaments and is also used for lampshades and such intricate pieces as model ships.

Embroidered Doilies

Embroidered tablecloths, doilies and clothes are part of the folk art of many regions of Poland. The finest embroidery is that of Kasubia and Małopolska.

ALCOHOL

Pure vodka is a Polish speciality. High-grade vodkas, those with a mixture of herbal and other extracts – żubrówka, for example – and liqueurs such as Goldwasser are also very popular.

Cut Glass

Cut glass is made in many Silesian factories. The delicate hand-cut patterns on perfectly transparent glass are appreciated the world over.

ENTERTAINMENT IN POLAND

Poland has a vibrant cultural life. In all the big cities there is an abundance of things to do: nightclubs, jazz clubs, casinos, theatres, opera, cinemas and concert halls. In summer, even the smaller tourist resorts have much to offer, and it is possible to chance upon many interesting and unusual events, such as a jousting tournament or a music festival. For those travellers who enjoy taking part in more strenuous pastimes, there is much to satisfy, with trekking, rock-climbing, cycling, windsurfing, canoeing, ice sailing and many other sports (see pp338–9) on offer. There are also various spectator sports such as boxing, soccer, speedboat racing and dirt-track motorcycle racing. For animal lovers the country boasts a number of zoos.

INFORMATION

For information on Poland's cultural events it is best to consult the local tourist information centres. In larger cities, information bulletins are also issued. In Warsaw, for example, there is Informator Kulturalny Stolicy and in Cracow, Karnet. The local supplement that is folded into the main copy of Friday's Gazeta Wyborcza, is another useful source of information. Details of cultural events are also published in the local press.

Bulletins printed in English are available in most large hotels and from tourist information centres. These are entitled What, Where, When and Welcome to... and form a series issued for Warsaw, Cracow, Poznań, Gdańsk, Wrocław and Upper Silesia. The Warsaw Voice, published in English, has a comprehensive guide to cultural events in and outside Warsaw.

TICKET RESERVATIONS

In Warsaw, advance booking for plays, concerts and other cultural events in the capital is dealt with by the ZASP box office. In Cracow, tickets can be bought in advance at the

A giraffe in one of Poland's several zoos

Cultural Information Centre

(see p337). Theatre, cinema and concert hall box offices will also reserve tickets for their own performances, and these may be collected just before the performance begins. The larger hotels will book tickets for guests on request. Surcharges may be applied for agency bookings.

VENUES

Many cultural events, apart from theatrical performances and classical concerts, take place in large public halls. In Warsaw, many spectacles are organized in the Sala Kongresowa in the Pałac Kultury. In Katowice, a hall called Spodek (The Flying Saucer) is the venue for both concerts and sports events. Wrocław has the Hala Ludowa (People's Hall) and Gdańsk the Hala Olivia. In summer, concerts and festivals are often organized in amphitheatres, for example in the famous Opera Leśna (Forest Opera) in Sopot, the amphitheatre in Opole or in Mrągowo in the Great Mazurian Lakes region. In Szczecin and Olsztyn, artistic shows take place in the castle courtyard. Castles, palaces and churches all over Poland also host various cultural events.

THEATRES

In Poland, almost all big cities have their own theatres – the country has, in total, over 80. Although theatrical companies move out of town for the summer holiday season, their premises are often used for festivals or theatre reviews. In Warsaw, the most popular theatres include Ateneum, Studio, Polski, Współczesny, Powszechny, Narodowy and Kwadrat, which specializes in comedy shows. The Teatr Żydowski (Jewish Theatre) presents spectacles in Yiddish; it is the only such place in Poland and attracts an international audience. In Cracow, the best theatres are considered to be Teatr Stary and Teatr im. Słowackiego. The major theatres in Wrocław are Teatr Polski and Współczesny (Contemporary Theatre).

Poland has enjoyed considerable fame for its avant-garde theatre. The productions of the Cracovian theatre company Cricot 2 have become world classics; unfortunately, since the death of Tadeusz Kantor, its founder, performances by the company have seldom taken place. The experimental theatre of Jerzy Grotowski and his company, the Laboratorium, was also renowned. The Jerzy Grotowski (Theatrical-Cultural) Research Centre operates in Wrocław. The Pantomime Theatre, founded by Henry Tomaszewski and presenting Polish shows, is still active. Poznań has its famous Teatr Ósmego Dnia.

MUSICALS, OPERA AND BALLET

For those who do not understand the Polish language, musicals, opera and ballet can provide the best form of entertainment, and there is certainly much to choose from in these genres. Poland has many operetta companies. The Teatr Muzyczny in Gdynia puts on very popular shows. Operettas are performed in Cracow and Gliwice and at Roma in Warsaw, which also presents musicals. For opera lovers, the productions of the Teatr Wielki in Warsaw are recommended. There are also opera houses in Gdańsk, Wrocław, Bydgoszcz, Łódź, Poznań and Bytom, and operas are staged at the Teatr im. Słowackiego in Cracow. The Warsaw Chamber Opera, which specializes in Mozart operas, has won international recognition but performs only a few times a month. Poland's two best ballet companies can be seen in the Teatr Wielki (Great Theatre) in Warsaw and Poznań.

CLASSICAL MUSIC

There are over 20 classical orchestras in Poland and they perform in almost all the country's big cities. Particularly renowned are the Filharmonia Narodowa (National Philharmonic Orchestra) in Warsaw, WOSPR (Great Symphony Orchestra of Polish Radio) in Katowice and the Poznań Orchestra, which gives concerts in the University Hall. In Poznań there are performances by Poland's most famous choir, Poznańskie Słowiki (The Poznań Nightingales), founded by Stefan Stuligrosz.

Classical music is performed in museums, churches and palaces throughout the year. In the summer, concerts are given in the open air. Concerts of Chopin's music are given on Sundays in Żelazowa Wola and Łazienki Park in Warsaw.

FOLK MUSIC

In Poland there are many bands that perform the traditional folk music of individual regions, although it can be difficult to track down their concerts. The most likely occasions are the festivals and reviews that mostly take place in summer (see p336). Regional groups sometimes give concerts on public holidays or harvest festivals. Many singing and dancing groups perform especially for tourists in concerts organized by hotels or tourist agencies, but in most cases their shows have little in common with genuine folk traditions. Polish folk music and dance have been popularized outside Poland by such high-profile groups as Śląsk and Mazowsze. Their shows are professional spectacles based on folk traditions, rather than authentic performances.

ROCK, JAZZ AND COUNTRY MUSIC

Student clubs and music pubs are the best places to go to hear rock, jazz and country music in Poland. In most big cities it is quite easy to obtain information on current shows. Polish rock bands are on tour throughout the year, and in summer they usually perform in tourist resorts. There are many festivals for particular kinds of music, so whatever the visitor's taste it will very likely be catered for.

FESTIVALS, CONCERTS AND REVIEWS

Poland hosts many festivals, both local and international. Two of the major drama festivals are Malta International Drama Festival, held from late June to early July in the streets and theatres of Poznań, and Kontakt, which takes place in Toruń from May to June. In Warsaw, there is also the Garden Theatres Competition (Konkurs Teatrów Ogródkowych), which lasts all summer, and the International Festival of Street Theatre (Międzynarodowy Festiwal Teatrów Ulicznych) in Jelenia Góra in late September. Warsaw Theatre Meetings (Warszawskie Spotkania Teatralne) are also among the most exciting theatrical events.

Opera festivals, such as the Mozart Festival in Warsaw, and ballet festivals, for example in Poznań are also popular. The most famous classical music festivals are the Chamber Music Days, organized in May in Łańcut Palace, the Chopin Music Festival in Duszniki Zdrój and the Moniuszko Music Festival in Kudowa Zdrój. Events of international renown include Warsaw Autumn, the great modern music festival, and the excellent Wratislavia Cantans, a religious song festival that takes place in Wrocław in September.

Lovers of church music gather in Hajnówka in June for the Festival of Orthodox Church Music. In summer, churches and cathedrals with especially fine organs host festivals of organ music; these take place in Gdańsk-Oliwa, Kamień Pomorski, Koszalin, Słupsk, Święta Lipka, Pąsów, Warsaw, Cracow and other towns. Music lovers also enjoy such major international competitions as the Chopin Piano Competition, which takes place every five years in Warsaw in October, and the Wieniawski Violin Competition, which is held in Poznań every four years.

Song is celebrated at the Polish Music Festival in Opole in June and at the International Festival of Song in Sopot in August.

Country Picnic, taking place in Mrągowo in July, is a country music festival. Jazz festivals are also very popular.

Major jazz events include the Warsaw Jazz Jamboree in late October, Jazz on the Oder in Wrocław in May, and Jazz All Souls' Day in Cracow in early November. The International Festival of Mountain Folklore in Zakopane and the Festival of Folk Bands and Singers in Kazimierz Dolny at the end of June are major showcases for folk music.

TOURNAMENTS AND STREET MARKETS

Many of the tournaments and street festivals that take place in Poland are colourful events and are popular with tourists. Medieval jousting tournaments are organized in medieval castles, some of which – Bytów, Gniew and Golub-Dobrzyń – have witnessed dramatic though bloodless skirmishes. As well as the jousting tournaments and displays of archery, feasts of meat roasted on open-air fires may be enjoyed.

Church fairs, festivals, picnics and street markets also take place in towns and villages throughout Poland. The best-known include the Dominican Street Market held in Gdańsk at the beginning of August and St John's Street Market, which is held in Poznań. As well as the numerous stalls selling an extraordinary range of goods, there are concerts, games and other events to suit every taste.

Sport and Leisure

A tourist information signpost

Tourists in Poland – those, at least, who are interested in such things – are fortunate in the enormous range of open-air activities available to them. The possibilities – which range from strenuous rock climbing and exhilarating skiing at one end of the scale to serene sailing or peaceful mountain trekking at the other – are almost endless. Horse riding is very popular as Poland has a centuries-old reputation for its excellent stud farms. There are also lakeside fishing and long canoeing trips (see pp288–9). Winter attractions include skiing and ice sailing on the frozen Mazurian Lakes.

Rock climbing – a sport for the fit and courageous

ROCK CLIMBING

The most difficult and dangerous climbing routes are in the Tatra Mountains. Climbing equipment is available in specialist shops. Although a licence is needed for climbing in the Tatra National Park, climbers have free access to the skaliki (rocks) of the Karkonosze Mountains and of the Cracow-Częstochowa Upland.

In areas where there is a dearth of mountains, climbers can practise on concrete walls; early 20th-century fortifications have found a new use.

HORSE RIDING

Polish studs have long enjoyed high esteem for the quality of their horses. Even when they were nationalized under Communist rule, they were highly regarded. Horse riding is once again popular, attracting increasing numbers of enthusiasts. In addition to stables with long-standing traditions, more recent riding stables, both large and small have been established. While some of these are open to all, others are quite exclusive.

HIKING

Hiking is very popular in Poland. The most attractive areas with beautiful landscapes usually have specially marked hiking routes. Hiking maps are available both in specialist bookshops and in local stores and newsagents. Hikers can rest or stay overnight in tourist hostels, which are numerous in the mountains.

When hiking in the mountains, it is forbidden to stray off the marked track. Hiking can be done independently.

The caves in the Jurassic rocks of the Cracow-Częstochowa Upland Alternatively, it is possible to join a hiking camp. Such camps are organized by travel agencies, usually student ones.

CYCLING

It is possible to travel the length and breadth of Poland on a bicycle. However, tourist cycling tracks are not marked, so it is definitely advisable to buy one of the guidebooks for cyclists in Poland before setting out. Narrow, busy roads should be avoided. It is also difficult to cycle safely in big cities, as there are few cycle lanes.

HANG-GLIDING

There are numerous hang-gliding schools in Poland. While some operate throughout the year, others are open only in the tourist season. All the schools have up-to-date, officially approved equipment. There are courses for individuals or small groups. Although hang-gliding is associated with mountains, it is also popular in lowland areas, on the coast or around the lakes.

Hiking in the foothills of the Tatra Mountains (see pp164–5)

SAILING AND WINDSURFING

The lakes and rivers of northern Poland offer endless scope for sailing. Yachts and other boats can be hired from lakeside hostels.

A stay in a sailing camp is a popular holiday. The longest and most attractive sailing routes are those on the Great Mazurian Lakes, the estuary of the Vistula and Szczecin Bay. Windsurfing – on the lakes, the coastal bays and the Baltic Sea – is an increasingly popular sport.

CANOEING

The most attractive routes for canoeing trips are in the north of Poland, in the region of the Augustów Canal (see pp288–9), and in the Great Mazurian Lakes district. The most beautiful trips are those along the River Krutynia and on the Western Pomeranian Lakes. Most canoeing trips last from a few days to a fortnight, and travellers usually make overnight stops at campsites. Canoes can be hired at riverside hostels. Route maps are available in specialist bookshops or local stores. For the fit, this is a wonderful way to see the country.

Sailing is a popular summer sport

ICE SAILING

The best place in all of Poland for ice sailing is Lake Mamry, one of the Great Mazurian Lakes (see pp284–5). Lake Mamry happens to be one of the coldest lakes in Poland, and in winter, when it is frozen over, it is perfect for ice sailing. International ice-sailing competitions have been held here since the inter-war years.

SKIING

Zakopane (see pp164–5), situated at the foot of the Tatra Mountains, is the winter capital of Poland. There are pistes both for beginners and experienced skiers. The longest and most difficult descents are on Mount Kasprowy, and include the Gąsienicowa run, 9.7 km (6 miles) long, and the Goryczkowa run, 5.25 km (3 miles) long. The skiing season runs from November to March. Pistes on Mount Nosal, 590 m (over 1,900 ft) high, are the most popular. Those on Mount Gubałówka, 1,600 m (5,250 ft) high, are less demanding. Beginners will find many easy pistes in the vicinity of Białka and Bukowina Tatrzańska. There are also many long, perfectly prepared ski runs in Szczyrk Brenna, Wisła and Ustroń in the Beskid Mountains of Silesia, and also in Szklarska Poręba in the Karkonosze Mountains and on the slopes of Mount Śnieżnik. The ski routes down Mount Jaworzyna near Krynica Górska are among the longest in Poland.

GOLF

Golf did not become popular in Poland until the late 1980s. It is a novel and exclusive sport. Most famous politicians, businessmen and those with a high profile in the arts frequent the 18-hole golf course at Rajszewo, near Warsaw. The best golf courses are in Pomerania and Warmia.

SURVIVAL GUIDE

PRACTICAL INFORMATION 342-351

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

Poland is a welcoming country and Polish people are well known for their hospitality. Since 1989, with the overthrow of Communist rule, tourism in Poland has greatly increased. Foreign visitors are drawn to the country for its history and folk culture, its great architecture, and the unique beauty of its natural environment. On a more practical note, new hotels have sprung up, petrol stations are more numerous and there are many more upmarket shops. The quality of service provided by post offices and banks has improved considerably, and cash dispensers can be found even in small towns. Phone cards can be used to make phone calls from almost any location. Poland is cheaper than most western European countries, although the best hotels and restaurants are expensive.

it

WHEN TO GO

For those who intend to travel around Poland, the best time to go is late spring or early autumn, when temperatures are usually pleasantly warm – although recently the weather in Poland has become quite unpredictable. At that time of year, tourist spots are not as crowded as during the long summer holiday period when coastal, lakeside and mountain resorts are packed with holiday visitors. Big cities, by contrast, are noticeably quieter in summer, so that moving around is easier and more relaxing. Summer is also when theatres close for the holiday break. After the summer holiday season, many guesthouses, hotels, clubs and restaurants in coastal resorts and other popular lakeside spots close. The skiing season runs from the end of November to mid-March.

TOURIST INFORMATION

Finding an information centre can be really difficult. Even in a big town, there is usually only one such centre. Their telephone numbers and addresses are listed in this guidebook, next to the name of each location. Tourist information centres provide professional advice, sell information bulletins and, occasionally, albums and books on the history of the town or region. Sometimes, information centres are found in railway stations.

For enquiries about accommodation, tickets and trains, Orbis agencies are preferable. Hotel employees may also be able to assist in providing essential tourist information if other sources fail.

MUSEUMS AND MONUMENTS

Details of opening times for most galleries and museums mentioned in this guidebook are given on the relevant pages. Generally, museums are open from Tuesday to Saturday, usually from 9am to 3 or 4pm. Entrance charges tend to be quite reasonable. An extra charge may be made for admission to the more elaborate temporary exhibitions. In some institutions, admission is free on one day of the week.

The tourist information centre in Zakopane

VISITING CHURCHES

As in many Catholic countries, visitors to churches are expected to be appropriately dressed. Sleeveless shirts and shorts, exposing bare arms and legs, are unacceptable.

Tourists in a pedestrianized area of Międzyzdroje

Horse-drawn carriage in Main Market Square, Cracow

Churches were once open from dawn to dusk, but crime has changed this. In big cities, churches are usually open all day, although visitors are generally not welcome during services. In small towns and villages, churches are likely to be locked; the priest may agree to let visitors in. Admission to churches is usually free.

FACILITIES FOR DISABLED PEOPLE

All renovated or newly erected public buildings have ramps or lifts that have been installed especially for the convenience of disabled people. Even so, disabled people are quite likely to encounter difficulties. Only in a minority of cities, such as Gdańsk or Gdynia, do most of the shops have proper wheelchair access.

Sightseeing is a much more significant problem, since old churches, palaces and historic residences are, more likely than not, inaccessible to disabled people.

It is also worth noting that driving motorized wheelchairs along pavements can be highly problematical on account of parked cars. New buses, by contrast, are an unquestionable plus. Routes served by low-floor buses specially designed for wheelchairs are marked on timetables. There are also special taxis for disabled people. In general, disabled facilities in Poland continue to improve.

CUSTOMS INFORMATION

A valid passport is required for admittance to Poland. For most European, and for many non-European, nationals, visas are not a requirement. However, check with the Polish embassy for entry requirements. Personal items may be brought into the country, but it is important to remember that limits are imposed on the import and export of alcohol and cigarettes. Guns brought into Poland and antiques exported from the country need a special permit. Gifts worth up to 170 Euros may be imported duty free.

MAGAZINES AND INFORMATION ON CULTURAL EVENTS

Poland has a lively programme of cultural events that take place throughout the year (see pp32–5, 334–7). Local bulletins providing information on upcoming events are useful

when planning a visit to a particular city or an itinerary in a certain area.

Local newspapers are another reliable source of information. Very useful is the Friday edition of Gazeta Wyborcza, which contains a local supplement, What's on?, giving details of cultural events. Newspapers also provide information on all regional events taking place in the week to come. The foreign-language edition of What, Where, When, which is regularly issued in big cities, is especially aimed at foreign visitors.

STUDENT AND YOUTH TRAVEL

Anyone who has an International Student's Card (ISIC) – and this should be obtained before arrival in Poland – is entitled to reduced admission to museums and cheaper accommodation in international student hostels, which operate during the summer holiday season. ISIC cardholders are also entitled to cheaper travel on international routes.

Within Poland, local authorities determine whether or not ISIC cards are valid for reduced fares on buses. In Warsaw, foreign students up to the age of 26 are entitled to half-fare tickets, while secondary school pupils receive a 48 per cent discount. The International Youth Hostel Federation (IYHF) allows reduced charges for young travellers. Detailed information on student rates is available from the tourist agency Almatour. Holders of Euro<26 cards will obtain lower prices in many shops, pizzerias, bars and cultural institutions, so it is definitely worth the effort to procure a card before travelling.

LANGUAGE AND COMMUNICATION

In terms of nationality, Poland is a very uniform country, so that Polish is spoken everywhere. Because Polish is a western Slavonic language, it is usually possible to communicate with Poles quite easily in other Slavonic languages. The older sector of the population, however, is less likely to speak English, so that it is useful – as well as courteous – to master a few basic words and phrases (see pp.382–4). All those professionally involved in the tourist trade speak good, or at least adequate, English. German and French are much less widely spoken.

RELIGION

Over 90 per cent of Poles are Roman Catholic. Although Poles generally attach much importance to religion, most do not have a dogmatic attitude. Symbols and rituals are deeply rooted, as is evidenced by the wayside shrines and solitary crosses seen everywhere. Religious holidays are solemnly observed, and the cult of the Virgin Mary is particularly strong. Eastern Poland has a large Orthodox minority, while Silesian Cieszyn has many Augsburg Protestants. The places of worship of other religions and Christian denominations can be found in big cities. Visits to Catholic churches are often forbidden during services. On weekdays these take place in the morning and evening. On Sundays and religious holidays, visits are possible only during the short break between services in the early afternoon. On certain feast days, such as Corpus Christi, processions wind through the streets, and traffic problems can be expected.

EMBASSIES AND CONSULATES

Poland maintains diplomatic relations with most foreign countries, and these countries have their embassies in Warsaw. The United States and certain European countries also have consulates in Poland. In the case of serious problems, such as the loss of a passport, the relevant embassy or consulate will provide help.

Sign for a public toilet

PUBLIC TOILETS

The modernization of public toilets is one of the most conspicuous changes in Poland since the fall of Communist rule in 1989. Although the provision of public toilets still leaves something to be desired, they can be found in offices, railway stations, museums, galleries and restaurants. Most petrol stations also have customer toilets.

ELECTRICAL APPLIANCES

In Poland, the electric voltage is 220 V. Plugs are of the two-pin type, as is the case in most continental European countries.

TIME

Poland is in the Central European Time Zone, one hour ahead of Greenwich Mean Time. Summer time, two hours ahead of Greenwich Mean Time, applies from 11 March to 21 September.

PHOTOGRAPHY

Photographic film is widely available in Poland. It can be speedily developed in numerous film processing centres, where the service is a little cheaper than in Western Europe. With a few exceptions, photography inside churches is permitted. Some museums do not allow photography, while others only forbid the use of flash. In places where photography is allowed, filming with a camcorder is also usually permitted, although a small fee sometimes applies.

NEWSPAPERS, RADIO AND TELEVISION

The mainstream foreign newspapers are available in most hotel shops and in some bookshops and newsagents, as well as EMPiK (International Book and Press Club) centres, which can be found in big cities. Among the most highly respected Polish national newspapers are Gazeta Wyborcza and Rzeczpospolita. Fakst, at the more populist end of the market, also has a large circulation. The largest advertisement sections are to be found in Gazeta Wyborcza and local newspapers.

What, Where, When: English-language editions for Warsaw and Cracow

Outside Warsaw, where the major national newspapers are published, the local press is the most popular. Gazeta Wyborcza, however, also enjoys nationwide popularity on account of the local supplements that are folded into the main national newspaper. These are issued in several regions of Poland. Newspapers and magazines in the English language are also available. The most prominent include The Warsaw Voice and Warsaw Business Journal. For cultural information, the anglophone leader in its field is What, Where, When.

The most popular television channels are the state-owned channels 1 and 2 (TVP1 and TVP2) and the commercial networks Polsat and TVN.

There are also many local and satellite channels, received through cable or digital television. Of the national radio stations, Radio Zet, which broadcasts pop music (107.5 FM) and RMF FM (91.0 FM) are the most popular. Interesting music programmes are broadcast on Trójka, Polish Radio 3 (98.8 MHz). Polish Radio 1 (223 kHz, 92.0 FM) and Radio 2 (102.4 FM) also have a large following. Polish Radio 1 has a programme that runs between mid-summer's day and 31 August from 9am to 12pm called "Lato z Radiem", Summer with the Radio. During this programme, the news and weather is broadcast on the hour in five foreign languages, including English. Local radio stations are based in every big city.

Safety and Health

City guard sign in Warsaw

The small number of policemen on the streets is the ongoing complaint of many Polish people. As elsewhere, crime has increased somewhat in recent years; organized crime is a new phenomenon. However, as long as they take reasonable care – avoiding certain districts of big cities, for example – tourists need have no real fears.

Although the health service has been reformed, it still lags behind Poland's dynamically developing economy. State-run hospitals are ill-equipped and underfunded. Even so, first aid is free in Poland.

Police car

MINOR HAZARDS

Most villages and small towns in Poland are very quiet and peaceful. In resorts, especially during the summer months, youths under the influence of alcohol may be apparent – the best tactic is to avoid them discreetly.

Polish cities suffer from the same crime and security problems as most European capitals, so that vigilance and care are needed. In case of difficulties, the police are helpful. In big cities, visitors may walk quite safely during the day. Attacks on tourists in city centres are not unknown, but they happen very seldom. Every big town, however, has its shady districts. In Warsaw, it is advisable to avoid Ulica Brzeska and the surrounding Praga district; in Gdańsk, the Orunia district is best given a miss, while in Wrocław, Ulica Kościuszki, Ulica Traugutta and Ulica Krasieńskiego are decidedly insalubrious. At night, robberies can occur even in city centres. In the Old Town and Main Town of Gdańsk, organized gangs patrol the streets and it has been known for them to snatch a necklace from a tourist's neck or grab a bag despite the presence of witnesses. It is assumed that a tourist will not go to the trouble of reporting a crime and having to appear in court later on.

In market squares it is best to avoid all the games of dice or three-card tricks that go on. The players are usually fraudsters, who prey on those naive enough to hand over money: the likelihood of being reimbursed if you win the game is rather small.

Policeman

Traffic warden

Drivers travelling at night should never react to signals given by anyone in plain clothes. Outside built-up areas, drivers can only be stopped by uniformed policemen standing near a marked police car – blue with a white stripe and a flashing light on the roof. Foreign visitors travelling around Poland should carry their passport with them at all times, or at the very least have some form of identification or the number of someone who should be contacted in the case of an emergency.

Police sign

AVOIDING THEFT

In cities, pickpockets are responsible for many thefts. It is essential therefore always to keep bags and wallets safe, and never to carry a passport, wallet or other valuable item in a back pocket or open bag. Travellers should always be aware of the threat of theft, especially in railway and bus stations, in trams and at bus stops. In railway and bus stations, thefts mostly occur in an artificial crowd created by the thieves as people are boarding, so extra vigilance is required. On trams and buses thieves usually operate in groups, sometimes using such methods as crowding or "accidentally" running into a victim.

It is also inadvisable to leave any valuable or desirable items, particularly a radio, in a car. A car alarm may not discourage thieves, and it is best to park in one of the many supervised car parks. Car theft is conducted by increasingly daring means, and the police appear unable to prevent it. The thieves usually use one of two methods. One involves telling the driver about an imaginary puncture. When the driver gets out, the criminals threaten him or her with a weapon, get into the car and drive off. Another method is to provoke a collision so as to make the driver get out of the car.

It is advisable to take out insurance against theft before leaving for Poland, as this may be difficult to arrange once there. Although the theft of a car should be reported to the police immediately, there is little chance of it being recovered.

POLICE AND SECURITY SERVICES

Security in Poland is provided by policemen and policewomen from different forces, as well as private security organizations. Any problems encountered by the visitor should be reported to a policeman in uniform, at a police station. The state police are armed and have the right to arrest suspects. Policemen patrol streets on foot or in navy blue and white cars. Traffic wardens, who have fewer powers, are primarily concerned with correct parking and the enforcement of traffic regulations. Traffic wardens wear different uniforms from town to town, and their cars carry plates bearing the town emblem.

Street traffic is the responsibility of the highway police. This includes the enforcement of speed limits and the control of drunken driving.

Driving even after a small amount of alcohol is against the law. The police may ask drivers to take random breathalyzer tests; a positive result will incur a very steep fine indeed. Penalties for parking offences and speeding are also very high (see pp.358-9). In the event of a serious car accident, all three emergency services – police, fire brigade and ambulance – should be called.

In many towns, private security agents are hired to protect public buildings and private houses and keep order at various events. They usually wear black uniforms.

MEDICAL CARE

Should medical attention be required, a doctor should be called or a visit made to the nearest hospital. Local daily newspapers carry up-to-date lists of hospitals. Poland has both public health service and private healthcare organizations. General health insurance is available only to Polish citizens, foreigners who hold residents' cards and political refugees. Citizens of those countries that have appropriate agreements with Poland (and this includes the United Kingdom but not Commonwealth countries or the United States) are entitled to receive medical treatment until they can be safely repatriated. While first aid is administered free of charge, other kinds of treatment must usually be paid for on the spot. Travellers are strongly advised to take out health insurance and obtain a European Health Insurance Card before arriving. Foreign nationals should always carry a passport and keep money aside for medical emergencies. An invoice for medical treatment will be given on request.

PHARMACIES

Pharmacies sell a wide range of medication, but most of them will only be dispensed if prescribed by a doctor.

Pharmacy sign

Reduced rates only apply to prescriptions issued in Poland. Individuals who are receiving specialist treatment should take a sufficient supply of medicine with them or ask their doctor to make out several prescriptions with the international name of the drug.

In every town, at least one pharmacy should be on night duty. An up-to-date list of such pharmacies is published in local newspapers.

Banking and Local Currency

PKO

Prices in Poland are still generally lower than in Western Europe, but hotels, restaurants and some imported articles tend to be expensive. In towns and tourist places, visitors should not have any problems exchanging currency in banks or exchange offices. Although it is by no means yet ubiquitous, credit and charge cards are accepted in more and more shops and restaurants. Cheques, however, should be cashed in banks as they are accepted as means of payment only in large hotels.

BANKING AND CURRENCY

In big cities, banks that will provide for all tourists' financial needs are easy to find, although lengthy queuing can be expected – especially at lunchtime, when many cashiers' windows are closed. Most banks are open from 8am right through to 6pm. Money can also be changed in the numerous bureaux de change, which sometimes offer better rates than banks and usually do not charge a commission, as banks commonly do. Money can also be changed at the cashier's desk of superior standard hotels, although rates there are definitely less favourable. An additional fee is also charged for changing money out of business hours. In tourist areas, near railway stations and in market squares you may come across touts offering what seems to be an advantageous street exchange. This is invariably an attempt at fraud: in exchange for foreign currency, the unlucky buyer will be duped with a wad of newspaper clippings, bank notes that have been withdrawn from circulation or fake notes – any of which may result in a great deal of trouble for the hapless visitor.

CREDIT CARDS

Credit cards are accepted in many places in Poland, especially now that Polish banks issue them to their customers. Credit cards are accepted in hotels, the better restaurants and clubs, car rental agencies and smart shops. Establishments usually post the logos of accepted cards on the door; however, it is wise to ask about any additional conditions for payment by Privately owned shops are often willing to give a discount for cash payment, since they will in any case lose money in commission on a credit card transaction. As elsewhere, credit cards can also be used for withdrawing money in banks or from cash dispensers.

CURRENCY

The official Polish currency is the złoty (meaning "gold"). One złoty is divided into 100 grosze. In January 1997, four zeros were knocked off the złoty, so that 10,000 złote became 1 Polish New Złoty (PLN). The old banknotes were then withdrawn from circulation. They are no longer legal tender and can be exchanged only in banks, but unfortunately, they are used by criminals for fraudulent purposes; visitors beware.

Telephone and Postal Services

In Poland, postal services are provided by Poczta Polska and telephone services by Telekomunikacja Polska.

Telephone booths are easily found, even in the smallest towns, as well as in tourist spots and petrol stations. In smaller villages, however, the only public telephone may be in the local post office. Public telephones do not accept coins.

USING A PUBLIC TELEPHONE

In recent years, many new telephone boxes have been installed, and old ones have been replaced by phonenumber-operated machines.

There are no coin-operated telephones in Poland, and token-operated ones have also been phased out.

The easiest way to make a call is from one of the phonenumber-operated machines. Phonocards are obtainable from post offices and newsagents. Some of the new generation of public telephones (which are a silver colour) also take credit cards and chip cards; these are specially marked. Calls can also be booked with a telephonist at a post office, with an advance for the first three minutes. If the call lasts more than three minutes, the balance is payable afterwards. If the call does not go through, the prepayment is refunded. Charges for long-distance national calls vary according to the time of day. The highest charges are for calls between 8am and 6pm on weekdays. From 6pm to 10pm on Saturdays, Sundays and public holidays, charges are lower. The lowest charges are for calls made between 10pm and 8am. Local call charges also vary, depending on the time of day – they are cheaper from 10pm to 6am. International call charges are fixed. When making a call to certain countries, it is possible to reverse the charges using the Direct Service. Information on country codes is available from Biuro Numerów (Directory Inquiries) (see box).

On lifting the receiver, you should hear the dialling tone. When the number has been dialled, there may be a vibrating sound as the connection is made. Then you will hear long, repeated signals. If the number is engaged, the sounds are short and frequent.

When making any call, dial 0 followed by the area code. Even local calls follow this format, so, for example, within Warsaw, you should dial 022 and then the number. Problems getting through may mean that the number has been changed. The process of modernization that the Polish telecommunications network is undergoing

MOBILE PHONES

Poland has four mobile telephone networks, which operate on two wavelengths, 900 MHz and 1,800 MHz, and cover almost all of the country. Only in the more remote areas, far from the big cities and the major population centres, do users ever experience problems with connection.

POSTAL SERVICES

Poczta Polska, the Polish postal service, provides a wide range of services. Post offices have been thoroughly modernized in recent years. Post offices are open from 8am to 8pm on weekdays. In the big cities, the main post office (Poczta Główna) is now open day and night, seven days a week.

In many modernized post offices there is a ticketing system and customers are served in sequence. On entering the post office, customers take a numbered card from a machine and go to the appropriate desk when their number is displayed. The card also indicates roughly how long the customer is likely to have to wait before being served.

MAIL SERVICES

Stamps are available from post offices and can also be obtained in shops and newsagents, although you often have to buy postcards too. While local correspondence should be posted in green boxes, letters for another town or a foreign country should be posted in a red box.

Letters to destinations within Poland usually arrive within 2 to 3 days of posting, while international mail may take up to a week, and inter-continental mail can take as long as three weeks.

For mail that is particularly urgent, Poczta Polska provides an express service and a courier service. Courier agencies such as DHL and UPS also operate in Poland, although all courier services are quite expensive.

USEFUL INFORMATION ON TELEPHONE NUMBERS

- Directory inquiries (local numbers) – 911, 913
- Directory inquiries (regional) – 912
- To book a long-distance or international call – 900
- To make an international call: first dial 0, then wait for the tone; next, dial 0 again, followed by the country code, the area code (omitting the first 0) and lastly the telephone number. The country code for the US and Canada is 1; for the UK, 44; for Australia, 61; and for Ireland, 353.

INTERNET CAFES

Now a common feature of all major Polish cities, cyber cafés can be found in bookshops, shopping centres, libraries and pubs, as well as specialist cafés. Opening times vary from office hours to 24 hours a day, and prices vary slightly depending upon the location. Some offer discounts for frequent users often via membership cards.

TRAVEL INFORMATION

Poland has several international airports, with flights to and from many European capitals, including London.

Warsaw, the hub of international air travel in Poland, has direct flights to many European and intercontinental destinations. Poland's major cities have international railway connections with neighbouring countries.

Plane from LOT's fleet

The country also has an extensive domestic rail network. One of the cheaper ways of travelling to Poland is by coach; there are departures from London, Paris and other European capitals. Polish ports are served by ferries to and from Scandinavian countries. Travelling to Poland by car is another attractive option.

Logo of LOT, the Polish national airline

ARRIVING BY AIR

Poland is well connected with the rest of the world. International flights from about 50 cities in 30 countries arrive in Warsaw. Polish airports also have connections with almost all the capitals of Western Europe as well as Prague, Budapest, Sofia, Bucharest, Vilnius and Riga on the Baltic, Mińsk and Kiev further east.

Warsaw Okęcie airport is used by about 25 airlines, including British Airways, Air France and Lufthansa. Warsaw has direct international connections with such countries as Canada, the USA and Israel.

The airports at Gdańsk, Katowice, Szczecin, Poznań, Wrocław and Cracow also have regular international flights. There are flights from London, Copenhagen, Hamburg, Munich and Frankfurt to Gdańsk Rebiechowo airport. Regular connections link London, Paris, Rome, Vienna, Zurich, Dortmund, Frankfurt and Copenhagen as well as Chicago and New York with Cracow Balice airport. It is possible to fly direct from Dortmund, Berlin, London, Hanover, Düsseldorf and Copenhagen to Poznań Ławica airport, and from Frankfurt, Copenhagen, Munich and London to Wrocław Strachowice airport.

To reach Katowice it is usually necessary to fly via Düsseldorf, Frankfurt, London, Paris or Rome. Szczecin can be reached from Copenhagen.

There are also a number of domestic airports including Bydgoszcz, Łódź and Rzeszów, which are served by Eurojet planes.

WARSAW AIRPORT

Warsaw airport, at Okęcie, 6 km (4 miles) from the city centre, opened for business in 1933. The present passenger terminal, which opened in 1992, has both a national and an international section, with an arrivals hall on the lower level and departure lounge on the upper level. Although the airport is not a particularly large one, it does provide everything that passengers are likely to need, from duty-free shops and a bureau de change on the one hand to a good restaurant and a coffee bar on the other.

A bus service runs between the airport and the city centre. Route 175 goes to the very centre of Warsaw; route 188 serves the eastern part of the city, on the right bank of the Vistula. Tickets can be bought at newsagents in town and at the airport, or they can be purchased directly from the bus driver – although in this case the exact fare, including a small handling charge, is required.

Taxi services also run to and from the airport. Visitors should exercise a degree of caution when booking a taxi.

Information stands in the arrivals hall of the airport give the details of several taxi companies that are contracted directly by the airport. Although it is quite possible to order a taxi from another company by telephone, it is generally not advisable to use private taxis as the fare may be very high.

OTHER AIRPORTS

New terminals have recently been built at the international airports in Wrocław, Gdańsk and Cracow. They are comfortable and well equipped, with restaurants, bureaux de change and car hire agencies. There are no duty-free shops. All these airports have regular bus connections with the city centre. From Gdańsk airport, at Rębiechowo, 14 km (9 miles) west of the city, bus B goes to Gdańsk Drunia, S70 to Goynia and 110 to the Wrzeszcz district, where passengers can make other connections.

Cracow airport, at Balice, 12 km (7 miles) west of the city, is served by bus 192 every 20 minutes, 208 every 60 or 90 minutes and X08. Poznań airport, at Ławica, 7 km (4 miles) west of the city, is connected with the centre by bus 59.

Connections between Wrocław airport, at Strachowice, and the city centre are by bus 617 and a LOT minibus. Note that there is a railway crossing with barriers on the access road to this airport; passengers who have cut their travelling time too fine may be late for check-in.

Passengers travelling to and from central Szczecin and the airport are transported by a special LOT bus.

TICKET PRICES

The cheapest air fares to Poland are APEX-type tickets with a set return date. They have to be booked in advance and paid for two weeks before departure. In accordance with international agreements, most airlines operate a system of reduced rates for children, students, pensioners and tourist groups.

ARRIVING BY SEA

Three Polish ferry ports have connections with Scandinavia. A service runs between Gdańsk and Nymäshamn in Sweden, and between Gdynia and Karlskrona in Denmark. Świnoujście has a regular connection with Ystad in Sweden, and with Copenhagen and Rønne in Denmark.

Travelling by Train

Logo of PKP, the Polish railways network

Poland has an extensive railway network run by Polskie Koleje Państwowe (Polish State Railways), with the result that it is possible to get almost everywhere by train. Big cities are served by fast InterCity trains, while international trains travel to many European cities. Journeys to smaller towns, however, may be easier to undertake by local bus, as bus services are likely to be more frequent than the train services.

ARRIVING BY TRAIN

International train services run between all major European and Polish cities. The London-to-Warsaw route passes either through the Channel Tunnel or Ostend. The journey by fast InterCity trains from Prague or Berlin to Warsaw is just a few hours long. Szczecin is served by German regional railways. At the frontier town of Cieszyn it is possible to walk from the railway station on the Czech side of the border to a PKP railway station on the Polish side. The main rail route runs across Poland from east to west, connecting Russia with western Europe.

EXPRESS AND LONG-DISTANCE TRAINS

The fastest and most convenient way of travelling around Poland is by express train. Express lines connect almost all big cities in Poland; the trains are fast and usually arrive on time. To travel by express train, it is necessary to reserve a seat as well as purchase a ticket. The most comfortable, but also the most expensive, are the InterCity express trains. On these trains, passengers are offered a free – if rather small – meal. Meals in restaurant cars are quite expensive.

The journey by express train from Warsaw to Cracow, Katowice, Poznań or Gdańsk takes from about three to four hours. Euro and InterCity trains have compartments especially for mothers with children and for disabled people. Long-distance trains, both fast and slow, are often delayed and can be dirty and crowded. Night journeys on these trains are neither comfortable nor safe. In Poland, there are two classes of carriage. Although travelling first class is more expensive, it is much more comfortable and is certainly worth the extra expense.

SLEEPERS

Long routes are served by sleepers with couchettes and very comfortable sleeping cars. Trains leave Gdynia or Szczecin in the late evening, arriving at their destination the following morning. The standard of the compartments is not high; unfortunately, the same cannot be said of the fares.

A platform at Gdańsk Główny, the main railway station in Gdańsk

TRAIN FARES

Fares for journeys on ordinary and fast trains are generally very reasonable. For journeys on express trains and in sleeping cars, however, fares are much higher. Teenagers and students up to the age of 26 who hold valid student cards are entitled to reduced fares.

Tickets are available direct from railway stations, and they can also be purchased in advance at any of the Orbis national travel agencies, which can be found in larger towns and cities.

Tickets can also be bought on the train, although in such cases passengers must report to the conductor when they board the train and an additional handling fee is charged. The fines for travelling without a valid ticket are punitively high. Reduced fares for excursion tickets are available on certain routes at weekends during the summer season.

An express InterCity train

Tickets for couchettes and sleepers can be booked via the Internet, on www.wars.pl, by telephone (022 473 43 17), or by fax (022 610 48 64). Travellers who choose to make their booking by one of these methods should pay the conductor for their tickets once they have boarded.

PERSONAL SAFETY

Acts of vandalism are not uncommon on suburban trains. Late at night, it is wise to choose a seat at the front of the train, where there are usually more people. If making an overnight journey

The main hall at Warszawa Centralna, Warsaw's central station

Kraków Główny, Cracow's historic main railway station on any of the long-distance InterCity trains, it is safer to be seated in a compartment that is occupied by several other passengers. Money should be discreetly hidden away in pockets and definitely never left in an unattended bag or suitcase.

If in any doubt, travellers should also avoid drinking alcohol with strangers; of course, most people are trustworthy, but you are more vulnerable to theft if you have first been plied with drink. Theft is, not surprisingly, much rarer during the day than it is at night-time.

LEFT LUGGAGE

Travellers may leave their luggage in the left luggage offices of railway stations if they want to go around town unencumbered. There is a charge for the left luggage service – often a kind of insurance, the price being dependent on the declared value of the luggage. Travellers should, of course, make sure that their luggage is fully insured before travelling to Poland.

The larger stations have a system of coin-operated luggage lockers.

Travelling by Suburban Train or Bus

Suburban trains are the best means of getting around over short distances, and Warsaw is well served by its own underground system. The Fast City Railway runs between Gdańsk and Wejherowo. For rail enthusiasts narrow-gauge railways still operate in some areas.

You will find almost all towns and villages served by local buses or coaches, with bus stations in big cities usually located near railway stations, and there are buses for longer international routes. Generally, the transport system in Poland is efficient and offers good value.

Fast City Railway in Trójmiasto

SUBURBAN TRAINS

Suburban or commuter routes are served by electric trains, which sometimes consist of open-plan, double-decker cars. The service is frequent and trains stop at every station on the route. At station stops, the doors open automatically.

Suburban trains are at their most crowded on weekdays before 8am and after 3pm.

TICKETS

Tickets for journeys by suburban train can be bought at the station – either from the ticket office or sometimes from a newsagent within the station. Before boarding a suburban train, passengers are required to punch their ticket in a machine installed by the entrance to the platforms. Tickets are checked by conductors during the course of the journey.

THE WARSAW METRO

The Warsaw metro, the only urban underground rail network in Poland, connects the northern Warsaw suburbs via the city centre with the large housing estates in the southern part of the city.

Warsaw metro sign

The metro is safe, clean and punctual. Entrances are marked by a stylized red M on a yellow background. Stations have lifts for disabled people. Tram and bus tickets are also valid in the metro.

Punch your ticket in a machine before crossing the yellow line marking the limit of the ticket-free zone.

FAST CITY RAILWAY

Szybka Kolej Miejska, the Fast City Railway (SKM), operates in Trójmiasto, the Tri-City of Gdańsk, Sopot and Gdynia (see p231). Trains depart punctually every few minutes and the destination is marked on the platform boards. A special ticket is needed to travel on these trains. The reverse is printed with all the stations at which the train stops. In Warsaw, a Fast City Railway service connects the western and eastern parts of the city.

NARROW-GAUGE RAILWAYS

Until the 1990s, narrow-gauge railways were very common in Poland. Today only a few remain and these are solely a tourist attraction. Information about routes is obtainable in railway information offices in the main stations, or in tourist information centres. An interesting narrow-gauge railway route is the one that runs from Gąsawa to Żnin, near Bydgoszcz. Beside the track in Wenećja, there is a Museum of the Narrow-Gauge Railway (Tel: 052 302 51 50).

INTERNATIONAL COACH ROUTES

Coaches to international destinations depart from all big cities in Poland, usually from coach stations near main railway stations or bus stations. For the cost-conscious, they provide a viable alternative to other forms of travel, and are operated by several different companies. Timetables are available in travel agencies; tickets for most international routes can be bought in Orbis tourist centres.

Coaches run from Polish frontier towns to the nearest towns of neighbouring countries. Przemysł coach station has a stop for coaches going to major cities in the Ukraine, Slovakia and Romania. Przemysł coach station is also a good place for starting excursions in the eastern Carpathian Mountains, which lie beyond the Polish borders.

COACHES

Most long-distance routes within Poland are served by Polska Komunikacja Samochodowa (PKS), Polish Motor Transport. The coaches are not very comfortable and the journey times are usually longer than by train.

In bigger towns, coaches stop for a brief break so that passengers can get out and stretch their legs. Tickets are available in coach station ticket offices or from the driver. The seats are seldom numbered. On longer routes, it may be preferable not to sit at the back of the coach, as this is usually commandeered by rowdy passengers.

Polski Express is a competitor of PKS; its main coach stops are in Warsaw and it serves several routes out of the city. One of the Polski Express stops is at the junction of Ulica Złota and Aleje Jana Pawła II, close to Warsaw's Central Railway Station. The other is near Warsaw Okęcie airport.

Polski Express has cheaper fares, comfortable air-conditioned coaches and pleasant staff. The journey time to places distant from Warsaw, however, is long, as the route taken is not always the most direct.

A long-distance coach of the Polski Express company

LOCAL BUSES

Buses are sometimes the only means of getting to small towns and villages. The service is punctual and tickets are available from the driver.

A PKS bus, serving local routes

Before 8am and in the afternoon local buses may be crowded. When planning to visit a small town or village, it is best to check connections in advance, as timetables at desolate bus stops are often vandalized and unreadable.

Information on local bus services is available from the PKS telephone information office and at all major bus stations.

Apart from PKS, private bus companies are becoming increasingly common. The best source of information about privately run services is by word of mouth in the particular locality.

An information board for travellers

MINIBUSES

Minibus services providing short-distance local connections run in many towns and tourist spots, and provide an extremely cheap and convenient way of getting about locally. Minibus fares are usually lower than those on PKS buses.

The minibus service runs frequently, but the number of seats is limited so, wherever possible, travellers should plan in advance. Minibus services are well-organized, particularly in Cracow. They stop near the Main Railway Station and serve most neighbouring villages, including Wieliczka and Niepołomice (see p162).

The minibus is also a very convenient means of transport in Zakopane (see pp164-5), Krościenko, the Karkonosze Mountains (see pp182-3) and in other highland regions.

Travelling by Car

A Warsaw parking meter

Poland has acquired something of a reputation as a dangerous place for foreign drivers, but this is largely undeserved. Car theft is a genuine problem, but it can easily be guarded against, and the pleasure of travelling independently is unbeatable. Renting a car is also quite straightforward. The only problem that driving in Poland presents is that of parking in big cities: they tend to be congested and there is rarely any parking space at all.

A car rental agency at Warsaw airport

ARRIVING BY CAR

Drivers in Poland should at all times keep necessary documents about their person: these are a driving licence, registration documents and comprehensive insurance.

Foreign drivers are also required to carry a green card, and foreign cars should display the international symbol of their country of origin.

In Poland, driving licences for passenger cars can be obtained from the age of 18.

Polish driving regulations are strict, but the roads are relatively safe.

CAR RENTAL

All the major international car rental companies operate in Poland. It is best to book a particular make of car before arrival. Key conditions are a valid full driving licence and a minimum age of 21 or 25, depending on the hire company. Before signing the rental documents, it is also advisable to check the level of insurance cover provided.

parking cards, obtainable from newsagents; the driver circles the date and time of parking and places the card in the windscreen.

In Cracow, driving and parking in the Planty area is difficult for foreign visitors. Without a special hotel permit, parking is in fact almost impossible. Elsewhere in Cracow, a system of parking cards similar to that in Wrocław applies.

REGULATIONS

Drivers must have their car headlights on at all times between 1 October and 1 March, as well as whenever it is raining or snowing. The national speed limit in built-up areas is 50 km/h (30 mph) between 5am and 11pm, and 60 km/h (35 mph) between 11pm and 5am; on roads it is 90 km/h (55 mph) and on motorways it is 110 km/h (68 mph). Radar speed controls quite often operate. Foreign visitors should bear in mind that if they are caught speeding they cannot count on any leniency just because

PARKING

Parking regulations vary from city to city. In central Warsaw there are parking meters and many car parks where a fee is paid to an attendant, although the car park is unguarded.

In the main streets of Gdańsk and Gdynia, coin-operated parking meters have been installed.

they are not Polish nationals: pleading ignorance is no defence. A fine will be charged, which must be paid by postal order.

Poland has very strict drink-driving laws – tourists are best advised not to drink anything at all if they are driving. Breathalyzer tests are a regular part of roadside police checks; drivers can be stopped and tested by police even if they have committed no infringement.

The use of mobile phones while driving is also banned while the phone is a hands-free model.

Children under the age of 12 must not be allowed to travel in the front seat, and small children must be strapped into special child seats at all times. All passengers sitting in the front seats – with the exception of heavily pregnant women – are obliged to travel with their seatbelts fastened.

It is obligatory for motorcyclists and their passengers always to wear helmets.

PETROL STATIONS

In big cities, as well as on Poland's major roads, finding a 24-hour petrol station does not present a problem. In addition to selling fuel and motor accessories, petrol stations usually have shops. Those outside towns also have bars where travellers can drink coffee or have a hot meal.

Drivers planning journeys to certain remote areas, however, should fill up in advance, as most small petrol stations in the countryside are open only on weekdays and close at 6pm.

Petrol in Poland is provided by multinational companies such as Shell, Esso, Aral and Neste. It is also supplied by the national producers PKN Orlen and Rafineria Gdańska.

ROAD MAPS

All the towns and cities mentioned in this guide appear on the map inside the back cover. Each chapter also features a more detailed regional map. Maps showing the most interesting excursion routes appear in the appropriate sections of the guide. For cycling or driving trips to other places, more detailed maps can be bought at tourist information centres and large petrol stations. There are now also Internet sites specializing in international route maps, and it may be helpful to consult one before setting out.

City sign

ROADS

Poland has few motorways. Some were built before World War II and their condition is far from satisfactory. A modern motorway, for the use of which a toll is payable, connects Cracow and Katowice. A new network of highways is currently being planned. Other roads are usually reasonably good. The arterial roads used by international traffic are often rutted by heavy trucks. They are a particular hazard in rainy conditions.

CAR THEFT

Poland has an unenviable reputation for car theft. To avoid falling victim to theft, always leave your car at a guarded car park, even when planning only a short visit to a restaurant. For expensive vehicles, additional precautions should be taken. One way of securing a car is to attach a wheel clamp, which is a routine procedure for illegally parked cars. There are also other sensible rules. Keys should never be left in the ignition, even when the driver merely gets out to open the boot or check for a puncture. Luggage should not be left on the seats. Beware of anyone pointing out damage or some other problem with the car; this may be a ploy to tempt the driver to get out of the car. If you have to stop and get out, it is unwise to do so anywhere but in a well-lit public place.

Getting around on Foot, by Taxi or Public Transport

Taxi sign

The easiest way of exploring most large city centres is on foot. Taking a taxi can be the quickest and most comfortable way of covering longer distances in towns. Most big cities have an efficient public transport system and fares are not high; this is also a good way of mixing with the local people.

ON FOOT

In the historic parts of towns and cities, motorized traffic is usually either limited or banned altogether. The Old Town in Warsaw and Cracow, the Main City in Gdańsk, the area around Main Market Square and the cathedral in Wrocław, and the old town in Lublin are best explored on foot. Distances between the historic sights are not great, but the condition of the pavements may leave something to be desired. Because they are uneven, tripping and falling or spraining an ankle may be a hazard, especially when it is so easy to lose oneself and become focused on the beautiful towers of a historic building high above the ground. Road signs in old towns present another hazard; some are mounted so low that they threaten the heads of passing tourists.

CITY OF WARSAW INFORMATION (MSI)

Signposts for pedestrians, indicating the distance (in metres) to particular streets and buildings

Warsaw's information system facilitates circulation around the city, which has been divided into sectors. Blue signposts, information panels and other street signs give useful information and point the way to particular areas, buildings and other landmarks. Pictographs and arrows on signposts point to the nearest telephone box, police station or public toilet. Brown boards identify points of interest in the historic part of the city.

BY TAXI

It is advisable only to use a taxi from a taxi company – identifiable by roof signs bearing the company's name and telephone number. Several such companies operate in every big town so flagging one down is easy.

There is no extra charge for a taxi ordered by phone. After 10pm, on Saturdays and Sundays and in remote parts of town, rates per kilometre are higher. Radio taxis (ordered by phone) are available 24 hours a day. Private taxis, which do not display a company name and phone number, should be avoided, as their charges may be several times the going rate.

A taxi from the fleet of one of Warsaw's licensed taxi companies

PUBLIC TRANSPORT IN TOWNS

The most popular form of public transport is provided by the bus network. Trams also run in many towns. Warsaw is the only Polish city to have a metro (see p356). Some towns have a trolleybus service, and in some areas, minibus transport is a cheap and popular alternative way of getting around town.

TICKETS

Almost every town – and this is also true of quite a few small villages as well – has its own system of ticketing. Fares also vary from place to place, and there may be an extra charge for luggage.

In most towns, tickets are universally valid for travel on buses, trams and trolleybuses. In Warsaw, tram and bus tickets are also valid on the metro.

In some cities, such as Gdańsk and Poznań, the price of a ticket depends on the journey time. There are fares for journeys of up to 10, 30 and 60 minutes. This can be a problem for anyone who is not familiar with the city. Journey times can, however, be estimated by consulting the timetable.

In big towns it is possible to buy a day ticket, or a group or weekend pass, which is designed for a group of five people travelling on Saturday and Sunday.

Reduced fares apply to children between the ages of 4 and 14 – so long as they appear on their parents' identity documents – and to holders of relevant cards. Small children (under 4) and people over the age of 75 travel free. Current fares are posted on special boards in prominent public places.

A fast city tram of the Pestka line in Poznań

TICKET PUNCHING

Random checks are carried out by ticket inspectors – plain-clothes officials wearing a conspicuous badge. Passengers travelling without a valid ticket are fined.

Fines are either payable on the spot or within a week by banker's order. The latter option, however, is not applicable to foreign visitors, on the grounds that they might abscond without paying the fine. Those who refuse to pay may be taken to a police station.

A tram stop with timetable

PERSONAL SAFETY

Passengers on trams and buses should be on their guard against the pickpockets that operate on certain routes (such as bus 175 in Warsaw), especially in big cities, where there are many thefts.

Money should be put in a secure place before boarding. Keeping it in an open bag or pocket is asking for trouble.

BY TRAM

Trams are a convenient means of transport, especially during rush hours, when cars can cause serious congestion. They are also – relative to other road traffic, at least – quick, cheap and environmentally friendly. Several of the largest cities have a tram network, and in the Upper Silesian Industrial Region (see p205), trams interconnect the neighbouring towns. Trams also link the centre of Łódź with four other towns of the Łódź agglomeration – Konstanyńów Łódzki, Ozorków, Pabianice and Zgierz.

Pestka, a fast city tram network with special tramlines, went into service quite recently in Poznań. A similar tram service is to run between Katowice and Bytom via Chorzów.

BY TROLLEYBUS

Trolleybuses run in Gdynia, Sopot, Lublin and other big cities. Itineraries and journey times are similar to those covered by buses. Trolleybuses are, however, gradually being phased out.

BY MINIBUS

In some towns, suburban routes are served by minibuses (see p357). They provide a regular service and the timetables can be found at bus stops. Tickets are bought from the driver. City transport tickets are not valid on minibuses.

Standard local bus in Warsaw

BY BUS

Bus services run even in small towns, although the smaller the town, of course, the fewer bus routes there are likely to be. Big cities have several types of bus; the local buses, usually marked with black boards, call at every bus stop. The fast, or express buses, marked in red, usually serve long-distance routes. Night buses, which run in big cities, operate between 11pm and 5am. Because fares on the night buses are higher, it may be necessary to punch more than one ticket. The tickets can be bought from the bus driver. There is usually one night bus route in every town.

In many towns, the bus fleet has been modernized, and the old buses have been replaced by modern low-floor buses (see p343) that make public transport far easier to negotiate for disabled people and for those with small children in prams.
